LOCAL MUSICAL EXAMINATIONS (DEC.)

DIPLOMAS, ASSOCIATE, LICENTIATE, and FELLOW, for Teachers, Organists, Vocalists, Pianists, Violinists, and Bandmasters.

PIANISTS AND DISESTABLISHMENT OF SCALE PRACTISING AND FIVE-FINGER EXERCISING.

THE NEED.

PADEREWSKI truly says:—"It is well to remember that in the case of pianoforte playing the message of the brain has to be interpreted by muscular action, and the more highly trained are the muscles, the more harmoniously working the nervous system, the nearer it is possible for the player to succeed in getting that which he produces to approximate that which he conceives and feels."

MACDONALD SMITH'S SYSTEM OF PERFECT TOUCH AND TECHNIQUE ("FROM BRAIN TO KEYBOARD.")

Imparts readily to any healthy pianist that lightning-like control over the movements of the fingers which has hitherto been the privilege of the gifted few alone. The System, consisting of exercises, general and special, together with technical rules for PIANOFORTE PLAYING, is taught in a course of correspondence lessons covering a period of about thirteen weeks. The lessons are specially applied to the correction of individual faults and peculiarities in the pupil's playing, and provided the instructions are thoroughly carried out, success is guaranteed to all players (amateur and professional). The careful and intelligent co-operation of the student in reporting exact progress made in executing difficult passages is all that is required. The System takes only a few minutes daily. The complete COURSE by correspondence, THREE GUINEAS. Write for book and all particulars, post-free.

"Pianoforte Playing," and other articles by Macdonald Smith, 32 pp., post-free, 7d.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE, W.C.

THE RESULT.

"I must tell you how delighted I am with the way in which I can now play Liszt's Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 2, since following your instructions. I can also get a good, loud tone-production with great ease. I am astonished at the result of the few exercises daily, for now I am in good form, although I have had very little practice lately. My sight-reading has improved very much. I have noticed it more especially in reading new organ music."—Miss D. M., Preston.

ST. MARY REDCLIFFE CHURCH, BRISTOL.

The fairest, goodliest, and most jamous Parish Church in England.—QUEEN ELIZABETH.

Bristol has reason to be proud of her musical associations. From the birthplace point of view she can claim some distinguished sons. Of these the place of honour must be given to Samuel Wesley, who drew his first breath in the great city of the West nearly a century and a-half ago. His brother, Charles Wesley, was also born there, as were Dr. William Child (in 1606), Robert Lucas Pearsall (at Clifton, in 1795), Dr. Edward Hodges, Henry Phillips (the singer), German Reed, Alfred Stone, and George Riseley—truly a goodly company of musicians whose fame has extended far beyond the city which gave them birth.

In the long ago Bristol could boast of its organ builder. Just after the Restoration—in May, 1662, to be exact—one Robert Taunton petitioned the City Council for the freedom of Bristol, on the ground that there was no other similar 'artist' in the city. Through the courtesy of the Town Clerk we are enabled to give the exact terms upon which the City Council granted the petition:

Extract from the Minutes of Proceedings of the Council of the City and County of Bristol at their Meeting held on the 13th day of May, 1662:

Upon the petition of Robert Taunton, organmaker, it is ordered and ordayned, in regard there is now noe such artist living in ye Citty, that ye Chamberlayne doe admitt him into ye liberties thereof, upon ye payment of five pounds in ye nature of a fine to ye use of ye Mayor Burgesses & Commonalty and upon condition that he take none to be apprentices but such as are ye sonnes of free Burgesses of this Citty.

ST. MARY REDCLIFFE CHURCH, FROM THE NORTH-EAST,
THE CHATTERTON MONUMENT IN THE FOREGROUND.

(Photograph by Mr. Harvey Barton, Bristol.)

The name of Robert Taunton is not to be found in books of reference, nor in histories of English organ-building.

The uplifting strains of English church music have long resounded through the length and breadth of Bristol Cathedral—a stately fane that, as soon as the new organ, now in course of erection, is completed, will form the subject of an illustrated article in this journal. Of other musical activities in the city, it sufficeth to mention the Bristol Musical Festival, the Bristol Madrigal Society, founded in 1837—of which society Pearsall was a member, and for which he composed some of his famous choral works; the Bristol Royal Orpheus Society, the Bristol Glee Men, and the Bristol Choral Society. All these and other organizations bear testimony to the love of the art of music amid the strenuous claims of that commercial life to which the city owes its greatness and prosperity.

The foregoing brief survey of music, past and present, in Bristol may serve to introduce a little chit-chat on one of the loveliest churches in this fair land of ours—a supremely beautiful building that a visitor to the city in 1634 has described in these felicitous if quaint terms. ('Ratcliffe Chappell' is, of course, none other than St. Mary Redcliffe Church):

On the other side of the Riuers Marish, and Citty in Somersetshire side, . . . standeth another strong, and curious Building, Ratcliffe Chappell, the which indeed more properly might be call'd the Cathedral: for itt is a fayre, and a large piece of Architecture, with an artificiaall embow'd Archt Roofe, all built of Freestone, at the onely charge and great cost, of a rich Citizen, who had been 5. times Mayor of this City.

Although there is no mention in Domesday Book (1086) of a church at Redcliffe—one built on a red sandy rock, or cliff—a reference thereto is contained in a charter of Henry II. (circa 1158) which confirms the endowments of the churches at Bedminster and Redcliffe. This, the original building, probably dated from the first half of the 12th century. Only a small portion of this church—of Norman design passing into Early English—remains: the lower part of the tower, the inner north porch, an effigy of a knight in armour (13th century), and some loose stones. As the old church became ruinous during the reign of Edward III. (1327-1377), William Canynges the elder and other citizens of Bristol razed most of it to the ground, and on the same site commenced the present building. The south transept, south nave aisle, and south porch were the earliest parts to be erected. Building operations were carried on into the next century; but the completion and magnificence of the present church is due to the great liberality of William Canynges, grandson of the elder Canynges. Five times Mayor of Bristol within twenty-five years—1441-1466—William Canynges the younger spent large sums of money on the sacred edifice whereby the vault was raised to 54 feet, the small clerestory windows were replaced by very large ones, and the Lady Chapel was lengthened by one bay. Before the completion of the work (about 1480) the spire was struck by lightning during a winter storm in 1445-6: strangely enough the spire remained truncated for more than 400 years until it was re-erected in the year 1872. It was then carried up to the great height of 283 feet, whereby the original design is effectively and imposingly crowned.

Cruciform in design the church is remarkable for its noble proportions and perfect symmetry of form. Viewed from the exterior the lofty spire—quite cathedralesque in its stateliness—at once seizes the attention of the beholder. Then the eye passes to the graceful flying buttresses, the pinnacles and parapets—the whole forming a study in ornamentation no less rich than perfectly harmonious. And what shall be said of the glorious interior? It must be seen to be fully appreciated, but the accompanying photographs will help the reader to endorse the words of one who has well said: 'The clustered pillars, the perpendicular lines of architecture, the lofty clerestory, the sculptured bosses, the vaulted roof, the mullioned windows, nearly all the lower ones being filled with stained glass: these, together with the strong contrasts of light and shadow, form a picture of architectural beauty few churches can equal.*'

The great height of the nave and chancel (58 feet) gives added dignity to the elaborate stone ceiling, which is greatly enriched with many bosses of which no two are exactly alike. Between this ceiling and the outer roof is a space of six feet. Although the church is non-cathedralesque in not possessing a triforium, its splendid six-light clerestory windows are such that many a mother-church might envy. Those on the south side are gradually being coloured with subjects illustrating the Te Deum, while those on the north side contain representations of ancient and modern saints. The quater-foils of the clerestory windows in the transepts are filled with old glass which adds a peculiar richness to the general effect of the design and colouration. While on the subject of the glass, mention must be made of the Handel window, placed in the north aisle of the chancel, and erected by subscription in 1864 to commemorate the centenary of the composer's death. The inscription reads: erected 100 years after his death.

To the Memory of Handel

The upper part of this four-light window—which is from the studio of Messrs. Clayton & Bell—contains angels jubilant as instrumentalists and vocalists. The scrolls above each light contain, in musical notation, the familiar strains of :

For unto us a	He shall feed	Surely He hath	But Thou didst
Child is born.	His flock like	borne our griefs.	not leave His
	a Shepherd.		soul in hell.

the chief figures and the lower subjects illustrating the above texts.

One of the most striking features of this splendid interior is the vista of the transepts, fifty feet high and forty-seven feet wide, complete with their double aisles—a church within a church, in fact, to be without an equal in England. At the other end of the church is the Lady Chapel in which, since the year 1854, daily service has been held. For many years it was used as a grammar school and a Sunday school, the arch between it and the church being walled up. On this wall and to the right and left of it were the three famous pictures by Hogarth to which reference will subsequently be made. Bearing date 1650 and hanging from the centre of the chapel is the only remaining one of many brass candelabra with which the church graceful and beautiful. The church of St. Mary Redcliffe can boast of two north porches. The inner one is a gem of Early English architecture, with a very remarkable doorway into the church. The outer north porch (circa 1300) was originally designed as a chapel to contain precious relics which were periodically exposed to the view of pilgrims who passed in by one door and out by the other, while watchful priests kept guard in the gallery above. Not only is this porch, hexagonal in form, specially rich in its decorated work, but the carved stonework of the outer doorway is said formerly was lighted. Similar candelabra have now been placed in the aisles; these are lighted by electricity. The chapel was restored by the Freemasons of Bristol, whose mark (intersecting triangles) on the floor forms a fine specimen of modern mosaic work. The extreme length of the church—from the west door to the easternmost end of the Lady Chapel—is 240 feet.

The church has been twice restored. In 1708-9, at a cost of £5,000, 'the inside was beautified and accommodated with abundance of rare things which it had not before, and in particular the chancell enlarged, and a new alter (sic) piece,' so a historian records: but as 'the abundance of rare things' included the erection of hideous galleries and equally ugly high pews, one doubts whether 'the inside was beautified.' The great cost of this needed restoration caused the parishioners, who were unable to raise the necessary funds, to ask the magistrates to certify the petition about to be sent from them (the parishioners) to the Lord Chancellor for 'a brief,' a request which was granted. A 'brief' was nothing less than a royal mandate ordering a collection to be made in every parish in England on behalf of a certain designated object. The mandate, which was obtained in due course, resulted however in the collection of only £1,400, reduced to £700 by reason of the heavy fees extorted by the officials in London! At the second restoration—between the years 1842 and 1872 and at a cost of £40,000—the excrescences of the 18th century were removed, the tower completed, and the church really beautified in accordance with its original design.

Before considering the music of the church attention must be drawn to more than one feature of general interest. Of the monuments the oldest is an altar tomb with the effigy of a knight in armour with legs crossed, indicating that he was a crusader, probably Robert de Berkeley, Lord of Bedminster and Redcliffe, who died in 1220. In the south transept are two altar tombs of William Canynges, the merchant prince of Bristol who so munificently contributed to the erection of the church. He died in 1474, having forsaken commerce and taken holy orders. Above the tomb is a moveable wooden board, placed there probably after 1660, which is too interesting not to be quoted in full: it is said that the mention of the old merchant's vessel, 'Ye Mary & John . . . 900 tonnes,' is the earliest reference to large ships:

marchant of ye towne of Bristow;

Americans will be interested in a large monumental tablet, placed on the interior wall of the tower, to Admiral Sir William Penn, a native of Bristol, and father of William Penn, founder of Pennsylvania. Above the tablet hangs the Admiral's suit of armour and the remains of some flags, said to have been captured by him from the Dutch. The inscription, fully biographical in its information, reads thus :

Under the tower—which contains a fine peal of twelve bells, the oldest dated 1662—is a wooden statue of Queen Elizabeth, which formerly stood in Queen Elizabeth's Grammar and Writing School, now the Lady Chapel. When 'good Queen Bess' 'progressed' to Bristol in August, 1574, she visited St. Mary Redcliffe, which she called 'the fairest, goodliest, and most famous Parish Church in England.' An old chronicler says that when she visited the College (at Bristol) 'theimme songe by a very fien Boye.' Near the statue is the rib of a cow-whale, said to have been brought by Sebastian Cabot in 1497 : much less doubtful is the legend that this rib is that of a dun cow that supplied all Redcliffe with milk ! An old brass eagle lectern, made out of brass used by the donor in the manufacture of pins, bears this inscription :

This is the free guift of James Wathen, Senior, of this parish, pinn maker. Anno Dmni 1638.

There are two hagioscopes, or squints, whereby the altar could be watched, and of the twelve marks of consecration (crosses), three can be seen. A curious custom of the 15th century is regularly observed as each Whitsunday comes round. To quote from Commander Madan :

In 1494 William Spencer, Mayor of Bristol, made provision for a Sermon to be preached in St. Mary Redcliffe on Whitsunday every year, in commemoration of the day on which his predecessor, William Canynge, celebrated the Holy Eucharist for the first time after his admission to the Priesthood. The Sermon was to be preached before the Mayor and Commonalty of the City, and the floor of the Church was to be strewn with rushes. This custom has been observed in accordance with the ancient bequest ever since.

It seems almost impossible to associate the art of William Hogarth with religious subjects, yet in the summer of 1756 the Vestry of Redcliffe purchased of him three large scriptural paintings—(1) Christ and the Woman of Samaria, (2) The Sealing of the Tomb, and (3) The Resurrection. The painter's receipt for the stipulated price, 500 guineas, 'in full of all demands,' is preserved in the archives of the church, but the total cost was £761, increased no doubt by the fact that 'in the execution of these works Hogarth was assisted by one Simmons, a sign-painter (!), who painted the altar piece of the Annunciation in All Saints' Church, Bristol.' Hogarth's three pictures, which formed the altar piece in St. Mary Redcliffe Church, were removed in 1857 (or 1858):

THE NAVE, LOOKING WEST.

they are now deposited in the Fine Arts Gallery of the city. As a writer has well and truly said :

Hogarth's true excellence—his intense realism—was of no service to him in work of a higher character, and the above paintings, now in the Fine Arts Academy, merely serve to prove his impotence in idealistic conception, his lack of a sense of beauty, and his poverty as a colourist.

Mention must be made of the crypt under the north transept, not only because the choir practices are now held there, but by reason of the fact that fifty Dutch prisoners captured by Blake suffered durance vile there for fifteen years.

An interesting fact is contained in an old record of the year 1543, which reads : 'This year, on the 2nd of July, the Litany was begun to be sung in English in a general procession from Christ Church to St. Mary Redcliffe.'

Two entries in the Marriage Registers are of special interest. Almost within a month two distinguished poets met their respective brides, sisters to one another, at the altar of St. Mary Redcliffe. On October 4, 1795, Samuel Taylor Coleridge married Sara Fricker, and on November 14, 1795, Robert Southey was united to Edith Fricker. Southey, a native of Bristol, had to leave his bride at the church door and hie him to Portugal, while Mrs. Southey remained with her sisters, and continued to bear her maiden name.

The connection between Thomas Chatterton, the poet, and St. Mary Redcliffe is of a very interesting nature. For nearly two hundred years his paternal ancestors had been hereditary sextons of the church. The ill-fated boy could therefore easily gain access to the ancient records of the church, then (c. 1765) deposited in the muniment room above the inner north porch. There the visitor can look upon the seven old oak chests, the contents of which were of supreme importance to the boy-poet in the production of those transcriptions from 'old manuscripts' with which he hoaxed the whole city. A monument to Chatterton is a prominent feature of the churchyard. (See the view on p. 725).

That the majority of Bristol churches were provided with organs in the 17th century is proved by an extract from the diary (already quoted from) of a visitor to the city in 1634. He records :

18 Churches, which are all fayrely beautify'd, richly adorn'd, and sweetly kept, and in the maior part of them, are neat, rich, and melodious Organs, that are constantly play'd on.

It may certainly be assumed that St. Mary Redcliffe was one of the 'fayrely beautify'd, richly adorn'd, and sweetly kept' churches that possessed a 'neat, rich, and melodious Organ'; but a Vestry Minute dated January 13, 1709, states :

Two seats were formerly granted to Mr. Perrot in the organ loft till an organ should be erected.

The earliest known instrument was that erected by John Harris and John Byfield in the year 1726, and opened on St. Thomas's Day, December 21. This fine organ is thus referred to by William Barrett in his 'The History and Antiquities of the City of Bristol' (1789), in connection with his description of St. Mary Redcliffe Church :

The entrance into the church is at the great West door, to which you ascend by steps. The door is 8 feet in breadth and 12 high, within which is built a great stone gallery, on which is a grand magnificent organ, being in all 53 feet high from the ground to the top of the crown panel; the great case about 20 feet square contains one great and lesser organ; the musical part was executed by Messrs. Harris and Pyfield [Byfield], and the whole cost £846 7s.

According to the Vestry Minutes the cost of the organ was £700; but on January 12, 1727, it was resolved to ask Harris and Byfield to put in two additional stops at a cost not to exceed £40. The balance of the £846 7s. may have been for the handsome case. (See the photograph on p. 728.) What has become of it? Here is the specification of this fine and imposing-looking organ, which had a 16-feet speaking front :

This organ contained the first octave-coupler made in England, and the instrument was of such importance as to be included in Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' concerning which the writer of the article 'Organ,' the late Dr. E. J. Hopkins, says :

The Compass of this instrument was in some respects unusually complete, the Great Organ descending to CCC, including CCC♯, and the Choir Organ going down to GG with GG♯; the Swell consisted of the unusual number of nine Stops. Four of the Stops in the Great Organ descended to GG only; and one of the open Diapasons had stopped pipes to the last four notes. There was 'a spring of communication' attached to the Great Organ, by which CC was made to act on the CCC key, and so on throughout the compass. The Redcliff organ therefore contained the first 'octave-coupler' that was ever made in England; in fact, the first coupler of any kind with which any organ in this country was provided. Some old printed accounts of this organ state that the Swell originally went to tenor C, with the lower notes of the reeds very fine; and that it was afterwards shortened to the fiddle G compass; but Mr. Vowles, organ-builder, of Bristol, who a few years ago reconstructed the organ, and had all its original mechanism under his eye, assures the present writer that the statement was erroneous, and probably took its rise from the circumstance that the key-maker, doubtless by mistake, made the Swell Manual down to tenor C, and that the seven extra keys were therefore allowed to remain as 'dummies.'

The following additional information with regard to this old organ is of special interest. It is taken from documents found among the papers of Mr. John Allen, organist of the church from 1772 to 1816, of which copies have been kindly placed at our disposal by Mr. J. W. Lawson for the purposes of this article :

To all Organists, Masters in Musick, and Gentlemen who are Judges or Lovers of the Organ.

Gentlemen,

Mr. Strahan, who drew the Design for the Organ-case, which was lately erected in St. Mary Redclift Church in Bristol, having thought fit to be at the expence of it's being engraved (for Sale) and having giving a very imperfect Account of the internal Contents, for want of desiring Information from us, the Makers of it, we think it reasonable to give the following Account of it ; and are, Gentlemen,

Your humble Servants

J. HARRIS and J. BYFIELD.

Red-Lion-Street, near Holborn,
London, Feb. 1725.

This Instrument is Consort Pitch ; the Compass or Extent of the great Organ, is from Double double C-fa-ut, D-la-sol in Alt, compleat long Octaves, containing 63 Keys ; and has the following stops, viz., two open Diapasons of Metal, one stop'd Diapason, one Principal, a grand Sexquialtera of five Ranks, a Trumpet, a Clarion, a Cornet of five Ranks, and a Twelfth, a Fifteenth and Tierce. The three last Stops are only from double Gamut to D-la-sol in Alt.

The Chair, or Choir Organ, is from double Gamut to D-la-sol in Alt, being long Octaves, containing fifty-six Keys, and has the following Stops, viz., a stop'd Diapason, a Principal, a Flute Almain, a Flute, a Bassoon, and a grand Sexquialtera of three Ranks.

The Echchos (which are made to swell or express Passion) are from Gamut to D-la-sol in Alt, being forty-four Keys, and has the following stops, viz., the open Diapason, the stop'd Diapason, the Principal, the Flute, a Cornet throughout the Keys, a Trumpet, a Hautboy, a Vox humane, and a Cromhorn.

This organ contains 26 stops, and 1928 valuable speaking Pipes, which are considerably more than either the Organ in St. Paul's Cathedral, or that in St. Martin's Church in London contain, and are as well perform'd in every respect, notwithstanding this Organ cost no more than £1,000 which is vastly less than the price of either of the others, altho the Compass of St. Martin's is only from double Gamut to D-la-sol in Alt ; and St. Paul's has (we think) only the two Diapasons and Trumpet, so low as Redclift Organ ; and neither of those Stops contain either the Double double C-fa-ut sharp or Double-double D-sol-re sharp, which are expensive Pipes.

Besides the C sharp, and D in Alt, are not in any of the Stops of St. Paul's Organ, altho' it cost three times the price of this.

N.B. There are Pedals to the lower Octave of this great Organ, notwithstanding the Touch is as good as need be desired; and there is an Invention, which by drawing only a Stop, makes it almost as loud again as it was before (or play in a double Manner) tho' there are no new Pipes added to the Organ, or any Keys put down by it. This great Piece of Work was completed within the Time agreed upon, and was finish'd in little more than a year and a Quarter; and was approved of as an excellent ton'd Instrument, by those Gentlemen whom the Parishioners made choice of to be Judges of it, as it has ever been, by all Persons that have Play'd upon it.

In 1867 the position of the instrument was changed from the west gallery (then demolished) to the chancel, when Mr. W. G. Vowles, of Bristol, built a new organ, in which, however, he incorporated some of Harris and Byfield's excellent pipes; one of these, the CCC on the great manual of the old organ, now forms the lowest note of the pedal open diapason (metal) and gives forth a sonorous note. The following is the specification of the organ as it now stands in its two cases, each with a 16-feet front, placed on each side of the chancel (as shown in the photograph on p. 731) the keyboards being placed on the north side:

The organ was opened on July 30, 1867, by Dr. (afterwards Sir) John Stainer.

In connection with the restoration of the old organ in the year 1829, three interesting recitals were given by Samuel Wesley assisted by his genius son Samuel Sebastian Wesley, then a boy of sixteen. Preserved in the Manuscript Department of the British Museum (Add. MS. 35,012) are eleven racy letters written by the elder Wesley from Blagdon and 'The Cloisters,' Bristol, between September 18 and October 30, 1829. These characteristic outspoken epistles of 'the celebrated extempore fuguist' furnish highly amusing details of his experiences in the city of his birth. An advertisement in the Bristol Gazette of October 1, 1829, of the Wesley organ performances, reads:

SACRED MUSIC.

REDCLIFF CHURCH, BRISTOL.

The Admirers of fine Organ Playing, and of Sacred Music in general, are respectfully informed, that the Noble Organ of this Church, which has recently been repaired and improved by Mr. Smith, will be opened by

MR. SAMUEL WESLEY,

(the celebrated extempore Fuguist, and Editor of the Works of the Immortal Sebastian Bach) who has not visited Bristol for the last Twenty Years, and who will display his Unrivalled Powers on that Instrument in Three Performances of Sacred Music to take place on this present Thursday, the 1st of October, Monday, the 5th of Oct. and Wednesday, the 7th of October, the Selections will be from the works of

and some of the FINEST CHORUSES will be introduced, for which an Effective Choir is engaged. The Performances to commence at eleven o'clock in the Morning, and will be varied each day.

Tickets for the Chancel, 4s.; For the Body of the Church, 3s.; or for the Three Performances, Chancel, 10s., Church 7s. 6d.

Profits to be applied to the Improvement of the Organ.

The Bristol newspapers thus reported the performances of the two Samuels, father and son:

CHURCH MUSIC.—On Thursday, Monday, and this day, Mr. SAMUEL WESLEY, whose great and astonishing powers on the Organ, are well known, has been performing several pieces on that instrument, recently improved and enlarged, in Redcliff Church. It were useless to add a word in commendation of his different performances, as men of science in the profession uniformly and unanimously, we believe, accede to him the palm of excellence as an extempore Fuguist: it is no wonder therefore that in so noble and imposing a Church as that of Redcliff—'the pryde of the West Countrie'—his abilities should produce a grand effect, and that his audience should be enraptured, and that all should feel that when such

'—flying fingers touch'd the lyre
The trembling notes ascend the sky,
And heavenly joys inspire.'

The great praise of Mr. W. and his able and interesting Son, who occasionally accompanied him in a Duet, and gave also 'God save the King,' with variations of his own composition, is, that with that powerful instrument, the Organ, they have far beyond their compeers,

'Enlarged the former narrow bounds
And added length to solemn sounds.'

Thus does the listener's mind (if he possess sensibility to the workings of this great harmonist's conceptions) either thrill with rapture, or shudder with awe, or sink almost overpowered with terror. Burke's doctrine, that terror was one of the ingredients of the sublime, was indeed truly exemplified during the winding up of some of Mr. Wesley's astonishing fugues. In this respect they deserve (in our estimation) to be compared even with those tremendous scenes in Macbeth, which recur to the memory of every admirer of Shakespeare, whenever allusion is made to the terribly sublime in dramatic poetry. What Johnson said so admirably of the genius of Milton, may without extravagance be applied to Wesley: 'The characteristic quality of his genius is sublimity. He sometimes descends to the elegant, but his element is the great. He can occasionally invest himself with grace, but his natural port is gigantic loftiness. He can please when pleasure is required, but it is his peculiar pleasure to astonish!'

The 'God save the King' variations, composed and performed by the younger Wesley—remarkable for a boy of sixteen, and one who must also have had extraordinary executive ability—were soon afterwards published under the following title, transcribed from a copy of the original edition (folio) now before us :

GOD SAVE THE KING, | with Variations | for the | Organ, | Composed and Inscribed | to | Robert Glenn Esqre. | by | SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY, | as Performed by him at the Church of St. Mary Redcliff, Bristol, & at the | Oratorios, London.

London : published by W. Hawes, 355, Strand, and to be had of the Author, 2 Cecil St.
Ent. Sta. Hall. Pr. 5s.

The piece was most probably published in 1831, as it was reviewed in the Harmonicon for August of that year. No apology is needed for reproducing the notice of an early work by a great master of English church and organ music.

ORGAN.

'God save the King,' with Variations. Composed by SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY. (Hawes, 355, Strand).

This is, in many respects, an extraordinary composition—first, on account of the rarity of the variations for the organ, some of them, too, in the brilliant style of piano-forte music ; secondly, from the uncommon use made of the pedals ; and, thirdly, because this tune, or National Anthem, is now, for the first time we believe, converted, and very cleverly, into a fugue—

VARIATION 8.

Spiritoso. ♩ = 116.
Full organ.

This, however, is carried on to a greater length than was advisable, and may advantageously be curtailed, for some of the bars are feeble, and the harmony is occasionally under too great a restraint. We cannot bring ourselves to admire the fourth variation, an adagio, for such flights are by no means suited to the instrument, and hope never again to see half-demisemiquavers written for the organ. Where the author will meet with a performer, himself excepted, to play the pedal part of the third variation, we cannot guess ; not in England, we surmise. Indeed, such notes (fourteen bars of running semiquavers, the crotchet being = 104) are ill adapted for pedal pipes. Notwithstanding these objections, we find in the present publication decided proofs of genius and a studious disposition ; and every good organist ought to be in possession of a copy. The author is a son of the celebrated performer, and bids fair to uphold the reputation which the name has acquired in the musical world.

The roll of organists of St. Mary Redcliffe Church, Bristol, during the past 179 years is as follows :

Nolme Rogers	- - -	1727-1772	- Salary £12
John Allen	- - -	1772-1816	- „ 20 guineas
William Stock	- - -	1816-1818

Mr. Stock, who was a member of the Vestry, agreed to play the organ for two years without salary, in order that the Vestry might save enough money to purchase a horizontal bellows for the organ. At the expiration of the two years Stock resigned, and received the thanks of the Vestry.

Cornelius Bryan	- - -	1818-1840	} Salary 25 guineas.
E. H. Sircom	- - -	1840-1855
William Haydn Flood	- - -	1855-1862
Joseph William Lawson	- - -	1862-1906

The first three holders of the office do not seem to have made their mark beyond the walls of the church which they doubtless served conscientiously and well. Cornelius Bryan—who was also organist of the Mayor's Chapel—seems, however, to have shown diligence, if not exactly genius, as a composer in varied styles—e.g. 'Goosey, goosey, gander,' with variations for the pianoforte, and a Symphony (his Opus 1) entitled, according to custom in those days :

A new Grand Overture, inscribed to Mr. R. Broderip, composed and adapted to the piano forte, with an accompaniment for a violin.

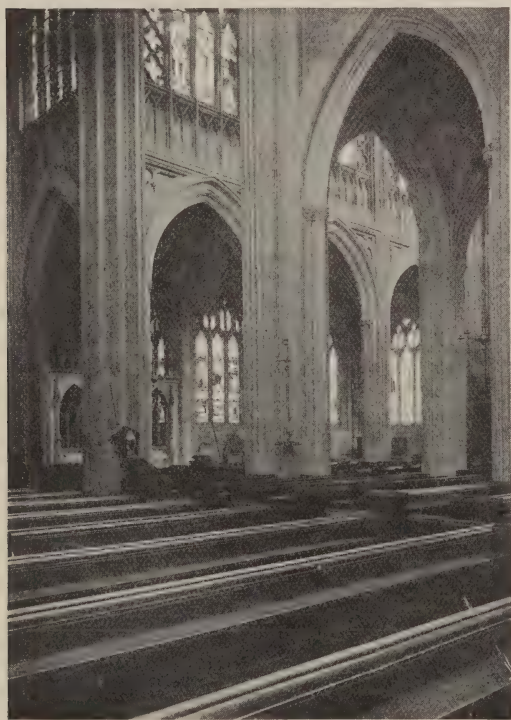

Mr. Bryan's Opus 2 is a collection of 'Six Songs,' of which three are with orchestral accompaniment. He also compiled

A collection of the most celebrated Psalm Tunes Ancient and Modern, selected and harmonised for four voices, with a separate accompaniment for the Organ or Piano Forte interspersed with a few original compositions.

He certainly did not attain lofty heights in his and it is impossible to pass judgment upon a creation which he probably regarded as the work of his life, and one that unfortunately proved to be the cause of his death, his original opera, 'Lundy in the olden times.' At one of the rehearsals of his opera, Bryan, in an absent-minded moment, and while walking across the stage of the Bristol Theatre, fell down a trap-door, with the result that he died on the following day, March 19, 1840.

The performance of the opera was thereby postponed, but it was announced to be given at the Theatre Royal, Bristol, on March 27, 'for the benefit of Miss Bryan, authoress of the piece and sister to the deceased composer.' Curiously enough Eitner, in his 'Quellen-Lexikon,' has mixed up Cornelius Bryan with Albertus Bryne (or Bryan), in assigning to the Bristol organist the authorship of a Morning and Evening Service in G, printed in Arnold's 'Cathedral Music,' of which Albertus Bryne (or Bryan) was the composer.

Mr. Joseph William Lawson—who has just resigned the organistship of the church—was born at Bristol, July 20, 1844. After having been a chorister at St. Mary Redcliffe he discharged the duties of deputy-organist for three and a-half years, until August, 1862, when he was appointed organist; therefore his connection with the church he has served so well has covered a period of more than half-a-century. A 'good little pianist' before he was nine years old, Mr. Lawson studied under two of his predecessors at St. Mary Redcliffe—Mr. E. H. Sircom and Mr. W. H. Flood. He subsequently became a pupil of Mr. J. D. Corfe, organist of Bristol Cathedral, and finished by taking organ and harmony lessons from Dr. (afterwards Sir) John Stainer, then organist of Magdalen College, Oxford. In response to a request for some reminiscences, Mr. Lawson says:

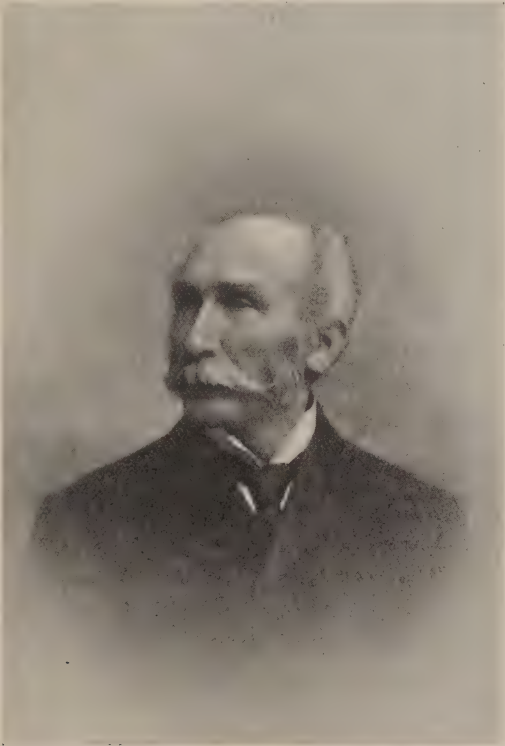

When I became organist (in 1862) of St. Mary Redcliffe the organ was in the West Gallery, and the choir, then unsurpiced, had been just formed. The Psalms were read, and about twenty each of chants and hymn-tunes, all in manuscript, were in use. We had no hymn-book, but the Tate and Brady metrical version of 'The Psalms of David.' 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' and the 'Cathedral Psalter' were introduced as soon as they were published: before the 'Cathedral Psalter' appeared we sang the Psalms from the Prayer Book which Canon Madan (vicar from 1852 to 1865) and myself had pointed and arranged for chanting. The introduction of singing the Psalms was accomplished by degrees. At first the practice was restricted to the Sunday afternoon service, because certain influential members of the congregation objected to the Psalms being sung at the morning and evening services: some time afterwards we sang them at both afternoon and evening services, but it was a long time before they were chanted at the morning service. I well remember the first time that Canon Madan read the prayer for the Church Militant. When he began it the whole congregation rose from their seats and walked out of the church! This they continued to do until some time after 1865, when the Rev. H. G. Randall became vicar: I used to watch from the organ loft the exit of the great congregation during the reading of that prayer.

I retain a very vivid recollection of a visit paid by Dr. S. S. Wesley to the church. He had expressed a desire to play upon the old organ of Harris and Byfield, with which as a boy he had been familiar when, in 1829, he played his 'God save the King' variations. I arranged a time for him to visit the church and he duly appeared, but, as he spied some people in the church, I could not get him to play: he wanted me to turn them out! This, of course, I could not do; so, after waiting for nearly an hour, and just pulling out various stops and playing a few notes, he took his departure, not in the sweetest of humours. He was, however, greatly charmed with the diapasons in the old organ, and said if any alteration were made in the instrument, he would, if he were in my place, have the pipes put into boxes and locked up!

In regard to the Whit-Sunday special service, at which the Mayor and Corporation attend in state, it is the survival of an old custom dating back to 1494. In that year William Spencer, Mayor of Bristol, made provision for a sermon to be preached and for the floor of the church on that occasion to be strewn with rushes. The church is also decorated with flowers, and the Mayor and Corporation are presented with bouquets. In former times the floral decorations on successive Whit-Sundays were certainly not what one would expect to see in a church, they being more suited to a fancy fair. Huge bunches of flowers were tied to and suspended from the gas brackets. Directly the blessing had been pronounced after the morning service, men and women in the congregation used to cut down the bunches of flowers and take them away as their personal property! It was a most disgraceful scene, and scarcely a bunch within reach was left for the evening service: things have changed since then.

Mr. Lawson has 'had the pleasure'—as he so pleasantly puts it—of raising the choir of the church from nothing to its present high state of efficiency. Except the boys, the choir of sixty voices is entirely voluntary. Moreover, he has done as much as anyone, if not more than others, to raise the standard of church music in Bristol. He was the first (in 1872) to initiate special musical services in the city, and the list of works performed under his direction—including Spohr's 'Last Judgment' about thirty times—bears testimony to the zeal of the organist and his able colleagues; most of these works, by the way, have been performed with orchestral accompaniment. As an ardent Freemason Mr. Lawson naturally took a keen interest in the restoration of the Lady Chapel. He held the office of Provincial Grand Organist for twenty-five years, and he is Past Master of the Powell Lodge No. 2257, and Past P.G.J. Warden. At the last service (on Sunday evening, October 7, 1906) at which Mr. Lawson played, the preacher (Minor Canon Jacob) said, after referring to the retiring organist's long and faithful service: 'To him was due in a great measure the reverent tone of the services which had struck so many visitors to the church. Mr. Lawson carried with him the good wishes of the congregation, who prayed that God would give him every blessing in his well-earned retirement.' Thus has closed a faithful and high-ideal ministry in the service of praise continued during many long years in that sacred edifice regarded by good Queen Bess as 'the fairest, goodliest, and most famous parish church in England.'

For valued help rendered in the preparation of the above article the thanks of the writer are tendered to Mr. J. T. Francombe, a former chorister and now senior churchwarden of the church; and to Mr. J. W. Lawson, the late organist and choirmaster, especially for his excellent photographs.

LADY VIOLINISTS.

An addition (suggested by Mr. W. H. Grattan Flood) may be made to the first instalment of this article. It appears that Miss Plunket made her first appearance in London a month earlier than was stated on p. 662. Here is the advertisement of her 'Concert of Musick' from the London Daily Post and General Advertiser, of January 27, 1744<sup>3</sup>.

The prejudice in England against lady performers on the violin was not only very deep-rooted but continued far into the 19th century. In this connection an extract forming part of a biographical sketch of Madame Mara may be given from The Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review of 1818:

We cannot help regarding the exclusion of females from the violin, as a prejudice, and nothing but a prejudice. It seems to us to be an instrument peculiarly fitted to their habits, delicacy of taste, sensibility and perseverance. We have seen it most elegantly played on by more than one lady, and Signora Gerbini was lately in England, performing in a superior style in public. We can imagine no solid reason against the violin as an instrument for females, except the awkwardness attending the commixture in an orchestra, but this presents no bar to private music being assisted by female violinists.

A year later the same periodical returned to the subject and said:

We are tempted to ask why should not the prejudice against Ladies playing the violin be overcome? It seems to us to be an instrument peculiarly adapted to their industry, delicacy, and precision; while what we have seen and heard of female violin playing fully bears out the recommendation we feel disposed to give to its adoption.

The Signora Gerbini, referred to in the former of the above extracts, was a pupil of Viotti, as was also a Madame Paravicini, who obtained a continental reputation a hundred years ago.

We may now pass to the consideration of an English-born lady violinist, in the person of little Miss Tremean, a prodigy hailing from Bath. This young lady, who made her first appearance in London early in the year 1817, seems to have been discovered by Sir George Smart. We read in the Morning Chronicle of February 17, 1817:

Sir George Smart has engaged for the Drury Lane Oratorios, a most extraordinary juvenile prodigy, a girl only eight years of age, to perform a Concerto on the violin.

Three days later the Morning Post informed its readers that, at Lenten oratorios given at Covent Garden Theatre,

The celebrated Miss Tremean, the Infant Prodigy, is to appear for the first time, and perform a Concerto on the Violin, upon which instrument the rapidity and excellence of her performance has excited the greatest interest and astonishment among the musical world.

The 'puff preliminary'—by no means unknown in our own day—was kept going in the various newspapers, doubtless due to the fact that long advertisements were being inserted therein. Thus the Morning Chronicle said (February 21, 1817):

That truly astonishing phenomenon, Miss Tremean, from Bath, makes her first appearance, and performs a Concerto on the Violin, upon which instrument her rapidity of execution surpasses expectation, and must be heard to be credited.

Miss Tremean—who was a pupil of John David Loder, of Bath—made her first appearance in London at Covent Garden Theatre on February 21, 1817, at one of the oratorio performances given on Wednesdays and Fridays during Lent. A copy of the play-bill of this music-making, in the possession of Mr. Arthur F. Hill, shows that the 'Messiah' was performed, that the prodigy violinist played a concerto, and that Samuel Wesley presided at the organ. The play-bill also states that

The celebrated MISS TREMEAN, whose performances have received such high and deserved applause from the most scientific audiences,—will, at the End of the First Part, perform a CONCERTO ON THE VIOLIN (being her first public appearance in London).

The Morning Post gave the briefest possible notice of the entire performance, saying: 'The treat was exquisite, but we have no room for particulars'—honest enough, but not very informing. The young lady divided her favours between the rival establishments of Covent Garden and Drury Lane (where she was announced as Miss Tremearn) during the season of Lenten oratorios by appearing alternately at the two houses, the Drury Lane performances being conducted by Sir George Smart. Miss Tremean's repertoire included violin concertos by Frenal (? Fraenzl) and Viotti, while at Drury Lane she played 'a new concerto' which contained the air 'Crazy Jane.'

We may now pass to the consideration of those wonderful and far-famed violinists, the sisters Milanollo. Teresa, the elder of the two, was born at Savigliano (Piedmont) on August 28, 1827: her sister Maria entered the world, also at Savigliano, on June 19, 1832. At the age of three years and nine months—on May 19, 1831—Teresa, with her father, attended a Mass to commemorate the death of King Charles Felix. The Mass contained a violin solo. On leaving the church Signor Milanollo said to his daughter: 'Have you prayed earnestly to God?' 'No, papa,' replied the little maiden, 'I have only listened to the violin'! From this time onwards the child persistently begged for a violin and even threw aside her toys, which were as nothing in comparison to the instrument she dearly loved. Her father ultimately promised her a violin as soon as she had learned her notes, and he himself undertook the task of teaching her. He then gave her a small violin of white wood, which he himself had made. Teresa was placed under the tuition of Giovanni Ferrero, and afterwards of Caldera and Morra, eminent teachers at Turin.

After having played in public, at the age of seven and a-half, at various places near her native town, Teresa appeared at a concert, given on April 17, 1836, at the Theatre Mondovi-Breo, where her first portrait was painted. The marvellous progress and success of his genius daughter induced Signor Milanollo to set out for France. He gave up his business and, with his wife and two little daughters, crossed the Alps. Partly on foot and partly on the only mule they took with them, the family made their way to Marseilles (where Teresa excited great enthusiasm at Musard's concerts), and afterwards to Paris. There the eight-year-old child took lessons from Lafont, under whose auspices she appeared five times at the Opéra Comique, and whom she accompanied on a tour which included Brussels and Amsterdam. At the Hague the Princess Frederick asked the clever child-fiddler to choose between the gift of a beautiful mechanical doll—which could move its arms and legs and make a bow—and a jewelled pin. Without a moment's hesitation Teresa chose the doll, but, needless to say, the Princess, no less charmed with the naturalness of the child than by her wonderful violin playing, added the pin to her gift.

THE SISTERS MILANOLLO.

Teresa Milanollo made her first appearance in England at a function which none of her biographers have recorded—the annual dinner of the Covent Garden Theatrical Fund, held at the Freemasons' Tavern on May 13, 1837, when the young lady was nine years old. The Times report of the dinner contains this reference to the juvenile violinist:

Mina Nola (sic), a charming little girl (only eight years of age), from Turin, executed a concerto upon the violin with a skill which all present agreed in pronouncing almost miraculous. The firmness and fineness of her bowing would not disgrace a master. Her performance created quite a sensation; and, at its conclusion, Mr. Charles Young bore her in his arms to the principal table, where she was almost devoured with kisses. (Times, May 15, 1837.)

Her first public appearance in this country was at Covent Garden Theatre, on the occasion of the benefit performance for William Farren, the actor, on May 29, 1837. In the play-bill she was announced thus:

For the first and only night
MADLLE. TERESA MELANOLO
Pupil of Mons. La Font
First Violinist to the King of France will perform an Aria Brillante with Variations!
Composed by
Mons. De Beriot.

This child will be eight years old in August next, and performed for the first time in this country, with most extraordinary success, at the last Covent Garden Theatrical Fund Dinner.

Here, as in The Times notice quoted above, the child's age was understated by two years. In London she took lessons from Mori and Tolbecque, and appeared at various concerts during the season of 1837. On June 30, although King William IV. had just died and was unburied, Teresa co-operated with another prodigy violinist, Master Auguste Moeser, aged ten, in giving a concert at the King's Theatre, conducted by Costa. The Morning Post, in noticing one of her performances at this time, said:

She performs on an undersized violin with much delicacy and feeling; her execution is also very brilliant, in the De Beriot style, and she is altogether a most interesting little person.

With no knowledge of the man he was dealing with, Signor Milanollo allowed his daughter to go on a tour in Wales with that mountebank-scamp Bochsa, the harpist, who, taking advantage of the talent of the child, made her play at no fewer than forty concerts within a month. This was in the autumn of 1836, and according to Fétis, who was most probably correct, Bochsa absconded with the whole of the proceeds.

Teresa taught her younger sister Maria the violin. She made her first appearance, aged six, at a concert given at Boulogne in 1838: from thenceforth, until the premature death of Maria, the sisters performed together, and on November 25, 1838, L'Association Lilloise united the names of the two sisters in a medal struck in their honour. Seven years later they appeared at the Philharmonic concert, Hanover Square Rooms, on June 6, 1845, when they shared between them a concerto by Vieuxtemps, Teresa playing the first movement and Maria the Adagio and Rondo. The second part of the programme contained this piece:

Concertante, two violins, the Demoiselles Milanollo (on airs from Lucia di Lammer-moor) - - - - - Milanollo.

At that time their ages were eighteen and thirteen respectively. In a notice of the concert the Musical World said:

The sisters Milanollo made their second appearance in England [i.e., in this year, 1845] with great success. Their youth—their sex—their pretty and interesting personal appearance induced even more to the effect than their playing of Vieuxtemps' elaborate concerto, which, however, was warmly appreciated and enthusiastically applauded by the audience. The duet, a bagatelle not without merit, received no less applause.

Maria Milanollo died of rapid consumption at Paris on October 21, 1848, aged sixteen; Teresa—who in 1857 married M. (now General) Parmentier, an eminent French military engineer—survived her sister fifty-six years. She died at Paris on October 25, 1904, aged seventy-seven years.

The beautiful Stradivari violin owned by Teresa Milanollo (Madame Parmentier) was made by the great maker in 1728, and is one of the finest examples that exists. It formerly belonged to Domenico Dragonetti, the celebrated contrabassist. By his will, dated April 6, 1846, he bequeathed it to Teresa Milanollo, adding in parenthesis that the instrument was once used by Paganini. From the late Madame Parmentier, Mr. Alfred Hill, of the New Bond Street firm, learned that Dragonetti had bought the violin from Paganini. Therefore it is an instrument with an illustrious history, and musicians will be interested to know that in the hands of its present owner, Mr. Willy Wollmann, the violinist, its great qualities are appreciated and will be preserved.

Spohr, in his interesting autobiography, under date circa 1804, records the following information concerning another lady violinist who made her mark:

During my stay in Brunswick I gave lessons to a Miss [Elise] Mayer, a talented young lady of sixteen, who as a violinist gave several concerts at Brunswick, gaining much applause. She studied with me my concerto in D minor. This pupil—after an interval of five and twenty years, during which time I had heard nothing more of her—suddenly excited general interest no less by reason of her fate than by her accomplished violin-playing.

During one of her artistic tours in Poland she married a landed proprietor of considerable fortune. Although in affluent circumstances, she did not neglect the continued cultivation of her great talent, though only as an amateur. This enabled her, after her husband had lost the whole of his fortune in the Polish revolution, and had become a refugee, to support herself and her daughter. As Madame Filipowicz she reappeared at Dresden and again played the D minor concerto she had studied under me a quarter of a century before. As she considered that she was chiefly indebted to ever increasing success to her rendering of that concerto, she felt impelled to express her thanks in a letter to her former teacher. In this way I became acquainted with the above circumstances. After her artistic tour in Germany she lived at Paris, and subsequently settled in London; from both these places I received letters from her. On the occasion of my last journey to London, I hoped to have seen her again, but I heard she had died only a few days before my arrival, and I was only able to make the acquaintance of her daughter and of her husband, who was a doctor and also a Polish refugee.

Fétis tells us that Madame Filipowicz was born at Rastatt in 1794; that she studied under Spohr; and that as Madame Minelli (the name of her first husband) she gave concerts in several towns in Germany. After the death of her husband she lived in the family of Count Starzenski, and later on she married M. Filipowicz, a Lithuanian gentleman. The Polish revolution of 1831 drove the lady to Paris, where she met with a sympathetic reception and was warmly applauded at her concerts. She remained in the French capital until 1835 and then permanently fixed her residence in London.

On June 16, 1834, Madame Filipowicz played a violin concerto by Rovelli at the Philharmonic concert, this being the first appearance of a lady violinist under the auspices of that now venerable Society. The Literary Supplement to Knight's Musical Library in a notice of the concert said:

A violin concerto from a lady was indeed a novelty! Such we believe has never been heard since the time of Madame Gautherot, and that is much longer than we are willing to believe. Madame Filipowicz is the wife of an exiled Polish colonel, and happily for herself and her family, is mistress of an accomplishment—if the fair ladies of Britain will allow us to designate it in relation to a female—which will not only secure her and hers against the sufferings to which most of her gallant, unhappy countrymen are reduced, but supply present comforts, and, with prudence, future independence.

We will not speak of her as a lady player; she has no need of appealing to our gallantry, or to ask for lenity on account of her sex; she is an artist, a good one, possessing all the requisites of a first-rate player—tone, expression, taste, and execution. Her knowledge of music, too, is, we happen to know, not of a confined nature. At a private party one of the difficult quartets of Onslow, with which she was unacquainted, was placed before her, and executed with a correctness that seemed the result of a long previous knowledge of the composition.

The singularity of a female violinist at first excited a half-concealed smile, but those who came to laugh (mentally) remained to admire. The really enthusiastic applause bestowed on Madame Filipowicz is partly, no doubt, to be ascribed to her sex, to her banished condition, and to the sufferings of her country; but most of it was excited by the talent she displayed, not as an exile, not as a female, but as a musician.

A footnote to the above notice reads:

One of our greatest and most esteemed leaders has placed his son under Madame Filipowicz for instruction on the violin.

The Athenæum, in its notice of the Philharmonic concert, thus frowned upon the violin as a lady's instrument:

Madame Filipowicz, who performed a Fontasia (sic) on the violin with sufficient skill and feeling to give our ears great pleasure, while our eyes told us that the instrument is not one for ladies to attempt.

At a concert given by Madame Filipowicz two days after that of the Philharmonic, Queen Adelaide, who patronized it, sent her a present of twenty pounds, and the Duchess of Hamilton gave her ten pounds. After a long illness this excellent violinist died on May 4, 1841, her death being notified in the Gentleman's Magazine in the following terms:

May 4. At Great Clarendon Street, Somers Town, Madame Elizabeth Filipowicz, wife of a Polish refugee, and a charming violinist, having been a pupil of the celebrated Spohr. Her funeral took place at All Souls' Cemetery, Kensal Green, accompanied by a great number of Polish refugees and other friends.

The inscription on her tombstone at Kensal Green Cemetery reads:

CHARLES RAQUEILLER,
Who died February 20th, 1837
Aged 20 years,
and
STANISLAS MICHAEL ALBERT RATAJSKI,
Who died April 16th, 1839,
Aged ten months,
Both children of Polish Refugees.
Also to ELIZABETH FILIPOWICZ,
the celebrated violinist,
the wife of a Polish Refugee, and grandmother to the above
S. M. A. RATAJSKI,
She died May the 14th, 1841,
Aged 43 years.

From the above inscription it would appear as if Madame Filipowicz was a victim to premature burial, as her death is stated to have taken place on May 14, five days after her interment! But the superintendent of Kensal Green Cemetery, in sending a copy of the inscription, says 'May 14 is doubtless the letter-cutter's error.' Here then is an instance which acts as a warning against placing too much reliance upon tombstone dates. If the age there given is correct, the year of the lady's birth was 1798, not 1794, as stated by Fétis.

It is not proposed to extend this survey beyond the first half of the 19th century. This limitation, however, includes the name of Lady Hallé, who happily is still with us; but as an account of her first appearance in England will be found in THE MUSICAL TIMES of October, 1900, p. 652, there is no need to repeat the details attendant upon the beginning of the English career of the most illustrious of all lady violinists.

In conclusion, a few odds and ends of information may serve to round off this imperfect contribution towards an interesting subject.

The only lady violinists in the 'Musical Directory' of 1794 are the following:

GAUTHEROT, Madame—Ora. C. G. [Oratorios, Covent Garden.]

HARTOG, Madame—No. 12, Leadenhall Street.

Two—all told, and one a visitor! How many lady fiddlers there are in London alone at the present day it would indeed be rash to estimate.

The following extracts from various periodicals speak for themselves, though the dates of their appearance—1860 to 1869—should be well borne in mind:

SPECTATOR—April 14, 1860.

Female violinists are rare, the violin being, we do not know why, deemed an unfeminine instrument. . . . Female violoncellists are rarer still, and we have never met with one. A young German lady, Mdle. von Katow, is delighting Paris by her performances.

CHOIR—Sept. 12, 1863.

(Answers to Correspondents.)

BERTHA.—We do not think the violin a lady's instrument. Better endeavour to excel on the piano, or harp.

ATHENÆUM, February 20, 1869.

It is a strange coincidence that a lady violinist playing music of the highest class should be just now drawing attention to herself in Paris and in Boston. In the former capital Madame Norman-Neruda performed Mendelssohn's concerto at the last of M. Pasdeloup's concerts, while Madame Camilla Urso has several times of late played Beethoven's concerto in the American city. The fair sex are gradually encroaching on all man's privileges.

'Man's privileges'! What would Mr. Chorley now say to the legion of lady violinists!

Violin playing by ladies made slow progress in England, even after the wonderful achievements of Wilhelmina Neruda (Lady Hallé) gave it such a splendid impetus. For example, it will cause, we think, some surprise when our readers learn that the first lady student of the violin at the Royal Academy of Music entered on January 18, 1872!

'The lady violinists at the Royal Academy of Music this term,' writes Sir Alexander Mackenzie in reply to a request for information, 'number seventy-two, and presumably, as the session advances, that number will be increased.'

Sir Hubert Parry, in response to a similar request, writes from the Royal College of Music: 'The number of lady violinists at present on the College books is—First study (including juniors), sixty-two; second study, twenty-six, making a total of eighty-eight. Therefore, adding these numbers together, there are at the present time no fewer than 160 lady students of the violin at the two great schools of music in this country. It was immediately after Queen Victoria came to the throne that the musical critic of a London newspaper, in a notice of Teresa Milanollo's playing, said :

We wish this exhibition (sic), which was anything but ungraceful, would bring the violin as much into favour with the English ladies (we mean those who have great and decided musical talents) as it is with their sex throughout the continent. (Atlas, July 2, 1837.)

Any such statement in the present day would be in the nature of a supererogation.

OLD FIDDLERS' BOOKS.

As they lie on the table around me—forty or fifty in number, oblong in shape, of all ages (at least from the beginning of the 18th century), in all stages of dilapidation and binding, some even stitched together by an old E string!—I feel that they would not tempt the ordinary collector even as a gift. Moreover at a sale of effects, with a few odd sundries to make something of a lot, they would be purchased by a second-hand dealer whose eye as to the capabilities of that lot would be more fixed on the broken mahogany music-stand included in it than on my volumes. The 'superior' individual—he who is superior in his collecting and goes in for fine tall copies, spotless internally and artistic externally—would not even handle the old books save with the proverbial pair of tongs. And yet to me, as they must have been to their respective owners, they have become very precious. They are old fiddlers' manuscript books, most of them with their music so rudely noted, their leaves stained with beer and tobacco and so appallingly be-thumbed as to be almost illegible. The older ones are cleaner and more respectable. They contain dignified minuets and other tunes for stately dances, nearly always named after some fashionable patron of the dance: 'Lady Coventry's Minuet,' 'Lord Albemarle's Delight,' and so on.

But I like the later books best. There seems a bit more humanity about them, for the stately minuets, cotillons and allemandes have vanished into the same limbo as their fashionable sponsors. The fiddlers to whom these books were stock-in-trade appear to have been a most rollicking lot, and, as I have said, the conviviality has so overflowed that it has reached the fiddlers' books and left its mark even to our own day. Here are noted down from all sources, traditional and printed, tunes that pleased the patrons of a very undignified ballroom. Therefore we may get airs that are not to be found in the countless collections of violin and flute music which the printers and engravers of a bygone time so liberally supplied. The old fiddlers' spellings too must have been on the whole weak, and their phonetic renderings would surely delight the heart of President Roosevelt. What ails ye at? 'The Pig with ought a tale,' 'The White Chockade,' 'Dorps of Brandy,' and 'She wore a wreck of roses.' Moreover, we find such interesting memoranda in the books as this: 'Denis Kenedy born Oct. 1st,' 'Mary Ann Kennedy Departed this Life Oct. 21 1845,' in addition to other family records which usually find a place on the fly-leaves of family Bibles. Again, a memorandum which reads: 'Due to Rody Brien, 18 and 2 pence,' with 'Paed 10 shiling.' One wonders if the trusting Rody ever got his '18 and 2 pence' in full! But without intruding into such delicate details let us turn over the leaves of the books. Here we may find many a merry tune. 'Vulcan's Scule,' otherwise 'Vulcan's Cave,' proves to be our old friend 'The king of the Cannibal Islands,' and we find that the dancing of Irish jigs and Scotch reels has not been confined to their native places. Here is a fine tune—one that, so far as I know, is now first printed. Denis Kenedy who owned the book, and creator of the debt to Rody Brien, has marked it down in sprawling notation with the title:

DRUM IN A BECK.

Turning to the pages of a Tyneside fiddle-book with some small pipes tunes we get :

THE PLAINS OF WATERLOO.

This is evidently up to then a non-printed tune, and is certainly much older than its title.

FRANK KIDSON.

Madame Gounod, widow of the composer, recently died, we regret to record, at Paris, aged seventy-seven. A daughter of the distinguished pianist and teacher, Pierre J. G. Zimmermann, the deceased lady, as Mlle. Agnes Zimmermann, was married to M. Charles Gounod in June, 1852, a few days previous to the production of his 'Ulysse,' but nearly seven years before he produced the work which brought him his greatest fame, the opera of 'Faust.'

Occasional Notes.

First was the world as one great cymbal made,
Where jarring winds to infant Nature played.
All musick was a solitary sound,
To hollow rocks and murm'ring fountains bound.

Jubal first made the wilder notes agree,
And Jubal tuned Musick's jubilee;
He call'd the echoes from their sullen cell,
And built the organ's city, where they dwell.

Each sought a consort in that lovely place,
And virgin trebles wed the manly base,
From whence the progeny of numbers new Into harmonious colonies withdrew;

Some to the lute, some to the viol went,
And others chose the cornet eloquent;
These practising the wind, and those the wire,
To sing man's triumphs, or in heaven's choir.

Then Musick, the mosaïque of the air
Did of all these a solemn noise prepare,
With which she gain'd the empire of the ear,
Including all between the earth and sphere.

Victorious sounds! yet here your homage do
Unto a gentler conqueror than you;
Who, though he flies the musick of his praise,
Would with you heaven's hallelujah's raise.

ANDREW MARVELL (1681).

Mr. Joseph Bennett, whose retirement from active journalistic work is announced, is not only the doyen of musical critics, but he may be regarded as a prince of critics. His claims to this distinction rest on his absolute sincerity no less than the literary excellence of his criticisms, which are always distinguished by the finished style of their pellucid English. His criticisms in The Daily Telegraph on the recent Hereford and Birmingham festivals furnish abundant proof that the hand of the gifted critic, notwithstanding his three-score years and fifteen, has not lost its cunning. Mr. Bennett is never happier than when describing a musical festival, especially if the music-making take place amid rural surroundings. The recent festival at Hovingham, in the East Riding of Yorkshire, gave the veteran critic his full opportunity. Here is an extract from his notice of the event in the Daily Telegraph of October 19:

The concerts now in progress began yesterday afternoon, and many were those who travelled to the opening by road and rail. It was a sunny day, and for October the country looked its best in robes which are still verdant. I know no better preparation for a high feast of music than a journey through the sweet pastoral scenes in which England abounds. Every landscape is a suggestion of music, audible only perhaps to subtle ears, but to them significant enough. It should be added that the trains of this rural region take care to give a listener time, moving slowly, like the process of Nature around them, stopping as often as possible and as long as may be when near a farmyard, as though to prove that even a manure heap breathes incense in its way and affects the 'atmosphere' of pastoral song. I have seen the country between York and Hovingham under various aspects—in thunder, lightning, and in rain—once when silvery mist lay so low that the raising of its head by an invisible bullock was as the sudden appearance of a strange creature above the waters of a tranquil inland sea. Yesterday all was clear and bright—no mystery, no apparitions anywhere—while with a cheerful heart the whole earth chanted a tender October lay.

Is not this a Pastoral Symphony in prose?

Mr. Bennett is to be doubly entertained in connection with his regretted retirement—by his brother critics at a private dinner, and, on November 6, at a public banquet presided over by Sir Alexander Mackenzie. It is understood that Mr. Bennett is devoting a portion of his well-earned leisure to writing his reminiscences; it is needless to say that such a book will be looked forward to with keen interest and will be very warmly welcomed.

In our October issue we gave an extract from what M. Arthur Pougin in Le Ménestrel described as an 'autographe de Berlioz qui nous donne le texte d'une biographie de lui-même écrite de sa main et publiée en décembre 1832 dans la Revue de Paris, par les soins et sous le nom de son ami Joseph d'Ortigue.' M. Julien Tiersot, the well-known littérateur, writes stating that the passage quoted was not written by Berlioz. He also declares that it is not correct to assert that the biography in the Revue de Paris was written by the composer. The facts according to him are as follows:

After the production of 'L'épisode de la vie d'un artiste' (Symphonie fantastique and monodrame du Retour à la vie combined) at the concert of December 9, 1832, Joseph d'Ortigue, who had entered into relationship with the composer, wrote his biography in the Revue de Paris. As a guide he sought information from Berlioz, who furnished him with some notes, of which he made what use he thought fit in writing his article; he modified and added much to them. These were the notes which, after they had been discovered by M. Weckerlin, were first of all published in an Italian musical review, and which then gave rise to comments as malevolent as they are inexact. To speak particularly of the phrase which THE MUSICAL TIMES in perfect good faith reproduced, it was not written by Berlioz: I have consulted the manuscript, and convinced myself that it is not there.

Berlioz did many odd things; it was, however, a surprise to learn that he allowed a biography written by himself to be published under another man's name. We are, therefore, glad to publish in a translated form the far more likely version of the matter as given above.

The name of M. Tiersot reminds us of the interesting 'Berlioziana' articles which he is publishing in Le Ménestrel. In a recent issue he describes the autograph of the last part of the final air and the score of the whole of the 'Incendie' symphony of the lost 'Sardanapale' cantata, with which Berlioz won the Prix de Rome in 1830. These excerpts he discovered at the National Library, in a volume of music in Berlioz's handwriting. In his 'Memoires' the composer, by the way, gives a graphic description of the performance of the work, or rather the non-performance of the climax. A cue was to be given by the horn to the drums, by the drums to the cymbals, and by these assertive instruments to the grosse caisse; but the hornist failed, and consequently so did all the others. Hence at the important moment cymbals and grosse caisse were silent, or as Berlioz expresses it 'rien ne part! rien!!!' The composer, furious at this fiasco, hurled his score across the platform; in so doing he upset two desks, causing Madame Malibran, who, the hall being crowded, had a seat on the platform, to beat a hasty retreat, as if a mine had exploded at her feet! How very Berliozic!

An echo of the Birmingham musical festival of half-a-century ago, in the utterance of a distinguished musical critic: 'Eli is half Elijah, but it is not half as good.'

Mr. John Rutson—the generous lover of music whose death we recorded in our last issue—did not forget musical students when he made his will. His bequests included (free of duty) £500 to the Royal Academy of Music (of which he was a director), the income therefrom to be applied to the ‘Alfred Osliff Rutson Memorial Prize,’ in addition to £235 to the same institution for the discharge of the fees of such students as may be protégés of the testator at the time of his death, in such manner as the Committee of the Academy may consider likely to produce the most satisfactory result. To the Royal College of Music (of which he was a member of the Council) Mr. Rutson bequeathed the following instruments :

The harp in use by Frederick Barker, of Caerphilly ;
The Guadagnini violin now in use in the College ;
The Guadagnini violin in use by Miss Cecile Elieson ;
and
The Foster violoncello now in use by Miss Alice Elieson.

Through the death of this good friend to music the Royal Academy of Music becomes possessed of several valuable instruments, as hereunder stated :

Stradivarius fiddle, called Le Mot, and the Stradivarius viola, both in the care of Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, of 140, New Bond Street.
Long Stradivarius fiddle now in use by Miss Winifred Robinson at Cheltenham College.
Amati fiddle now in use by Gerald Walenn.
Amati viola in the care of Mr. Sims Fagan, British Museum Print Room.
The ‘Cappa’ fiddle, now at Newby Wiske.
The ‘Rocca’ fiddle, at Newby Wiske.
The ‘Pressenda’ fiddle, now in the use of Philip Cathie, of Bradford.
The ‘Bela’ fiddle, now in the use of Harry Newin, of Brixton.
The ‘Grancino’ viola, now used by Arthur Walenn, of Ingleside, East Twickenham.
Three flutes and flute music, purchased from the late Prof. Svendsen’s executors.

The testator most considerably ordered that those who, at his death, had charge of the instruments specified above, should be allowed to use them as long as they needed to do so. Kindhearted in life and in death was John Rutson.

Mr. William Pountney is the grand old man of the Birmingham festival chorus. With the exception of the meeting of 1849, he has sung on every occasion since 1846, and he was one of the fine body of basses at the recent festival. Mr. Pountney, who sang at the production of ‘Elijah’ sixty years ago, has distinct and pleasant recollections of Mendelssohn and the enthusiasm which the composer and his oratorio excited on that eventful occasion. Congratulations to the veteran chorus-singer upon his three-score years in the cause of choral music.

At the Birmingham Festival two gentlemen were noticed to leave the concert-room during the performance of Mr. Granville Bantock’s ‘Omar Khayyam.’ What might have seemed a slight to the composer was satisfactorily accounted for by their subsequent explanations, for it seems that their hurried exodus was simply the result of Mr. Bantock’s vivid power of characterization. The reason assigned by one gentleman was that the desert scene was so realistic as to create a premature drought the immediate slaking of which was an absolute necessity ; while his friend frankly admitted that Mr. Bantock’s camels had given him the ‘hump.’

The Exeter Oratorio Society, founded in 1846, is to celebrate its Diamond Jubilee with a festival (three concerts) to be held on November 27 and 28 in the Victoria Hall, Exeter. ‘Elijah’ is to open the festival, and on the following day two concerts are to be given, the programmes of which include Parry’s ‘Blest pair of sirens,’ Dvorák’s ‘The spectre’s bride’ and the ‘Meistersinger’ overture. Not the least interesting feature of this Diamond Jubilee is the promised production of a new oratorio entitled ‘The Risen Lord,’ the words written by Mr. Joseph Bennett, the music composed by Dr. Henry J. Edwards, of Barnstaple. The work, laid out for solo voices, chorus and orchestra, is divided into four parts—(i.) At the Sepulchre ; (ii.) At Emmaus ; (iii.) On the lake shore, and (iv.) On the Mount of Ascension. The subject is one that suggests reflective music, and this Dr. Edwards has written with earnestness of purpose, artistic insight, and complete reverence for the sacredness of the subject. At the same time the work is not without its jubilant note—as, for instance, a chorus for female voices ‘O joy no words can tell,’ which leads into a full chorus ‘Thou glorious Resurrection Morn.’ An extended orchestral movement, forming an introduction to Part III., most effectively reflects the tranquillity associated with ‘The lake shore,’ and is certain to prove a most acceptable number of a work that does credit to its composer, and the production of which will be anticipated with interest, especially in Dr. Edwards’s native Devonshire. At the festival the Exeter Oratorio Society will be assisted by the Western Counties Musical Association (Exeter branch) and the Barnstaple Musical Festival Society, the combined forces (band and chorus of 400) being under the honorary conductorship of Dr. H. J. Edwards and Dr. D. J. Wood, organist of Exeter Cathedral. May all success attend this Diamond Jubilee Festival.

Mr. Algernon Ashton must really look to the laurels which crown his epistolary brow, as someone has been writing a letter to the Morning Leader signing himself ‘Algerno Nashton.’ While on the subject of this champion letter-writer to the newspapers, we have received the following communication from a correspondent. This gentleman writes on a post-card, which, judging from the post-mark thereupon, may have been posted on his way home, and not at his place of residence. He asks :

If I agree with Mr. Algernon Ashton, would it be right to say  ? And if I don’t agree with him, to say in one word (sforzando)  or, briefer,  ?

Yours gravely,

Hades,
October 13, 1906.

OBITUITIS.

In the report of the recent Birmingham festival which appeared in a London newspaper, we read :

They sang ‘Thanks be to God’ and ‘He loveth the thirsty land’ as if they really meant it from the bottom of their hearts, and outside, the loving process was being carried on with a vengeance.

It is too bad not to tell us who were carrying on this ‘loving process’ outside the Town Hall, and that too in broad daylight, and so near Broad Street. Shocking !

COSTA'S DEBUT AT BIRMINGHAM—AND AFTER.

In the year 1829 Michael Costa—to give him his full name, Michael Andrew Agnus Costa—first set his foot in the city (then town) of Birmingham. He came, uninvited, to conduct a 'Cantata sacra' which his master, Zingarelli, then an old man of seventy-seven, had composed for the festival, but which the youthful Costa is said to have scored! The Festival Committee looked askance at a beardless youth coming to this festival with such pretensions. They absolutely refused to allow him to fulfil his mission. 'Can you sing?' they asked. 'Conducting, not singing, is my forte,' replied the young Neapolitan, 'and I have never appeared in public as a singer.' The committee then gave him to understand that unless he did sing they would not pay a shilling towards his travelling expenses! These 'terms' resulted in Costa's making his first appearance in England as a vocalist and not as a masterful conductor.

The original word-book of the Birmingham Festival of 1829 shows that Costa made his début at the Theatre—where the evening performances were then given—on October 6, 1829, the 'Scheme,' as it was called, including the following, sung at the end of Act I.:

SCENA from La Donna del Lago . . . . Rossini.
Performed by Miss F. Ayton and Signor Costa, in character.

Other appearances of the snubbed conductor included his vocal participation, with Malibran, in a Rossini quartet, his singing of another scena (in character), &c. He also took part in the Zingarelli cantata, concerning which and the young man's vocal achievements the Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review, then on its last legs, said 'The singer was little, if at all, better than the composition.'

Musical criticism in those days was not so kid-gloved as now, and youthful Mr. Costa received a warm—nay, Vesuvian—reception at the hands of the Harmonicon, at that time the only journal in England devoted to music. Here is the criticism:

Having spoken of so many new compositions, we must now say a word or two of the new singer, Signor Costa. The bills kept us quite in the dark respecting this gentleman; it was not even announced as his first appearance; it was not stated whence he was imported, or whether his voice was base, soprano, or anything between. But this silence was well-judged, for it certainly did not lead us to expect much. His voice proves to be a tenor, not very unlike Begrez's in quality, and we have been informed he came from Naples, recommended by Zingarelli, who would have acted with more discretion had he kept both his sacred song and profane singer for the benefit of his Neapolitan friends. As a singer he is far below mediocrity, and he does not compensate for his vocal deficiencies by his personal address, which is abundantly awkward. In the theatre [where the secular concerts were then given], while singing the air 'Nel furor delle tempeste,' and accompanying himself, he had a narrow escape. The tempests proved contagious and were beginning to manifest themselves in the galleries, and had he remained but a few moments longer on the stage he would have witnessed a storm compared to which the roarings of his own Vesuvius would have seemed but a murmur.

The Athenæum was equally uncomplimentary in saying, with a pun thrown in:

This gentleman [Costa] was sent over, we believe, by poor old Zingarelli from Naples, to assist in his Cantata Sacra; and it seems to be the opinion that he [Costa] had better return again immediately. . . . He is not a necessary addition to the foreign musicians with whom the country is already overstocked. It was jocosely said of him, on making his début, 'Questo Signor costa troppo,' or, in plain English, 'This signor costs too much.'

At this festival Braham sang 'Deeper and deeper still' and 'Waft her, angels' (Jephtha), a Handel excerpt which he interpreted with intense pathos, especially the recitative. Costa listened to it with open mouth, indicative of the most earnest attention, so as not to lose a note of that incomparable performance. After Braham in tones of agony had sung 'I can no more,' Costa—who had not understood a word of the text—turned to Malibran and asked 'What is he saying?' To which that versatile artist roughly replied—'Poor devil; it's all up with him!'

An interesting letter, now preserved in the library of the Royal College of Music, was written by Zingarelli to young Costa at this time. This communication—received by Costa in London, and we believe not hitherto printed—speaks for itself in the following translation kindly made by Mr. W. Barclay Squire specially for this article:

Naples, 9 September, 1829.

Thank you for having honoured me with your two most welcome [letters], in which you have told me, but not fully, your hopes of a successful production, the perfect execution of the choir, [and] the capability of the lady, but I await with impatience news of the verdict of the English gentry and of the public papers. You have written nothing to me about the Symphonies and the Psalm 'Super Flumina' and what their fate will be.

I have heard with indescribable displeasure from your father that you want to return to your native country: reflect well on this imprudent resolve and do not lose such a chance, which when once lost, never returns again. Listen patiently to the prayers of a friend who loves you and do not make your enemies laugh.

If you see the lady who was so good as to be pleased with my Juliet, thank her in my name for the kindness she has shown to an old man.

Everyone greets you, and I embrace you with all my heart and protest myself to be sincerely,

NICCOLO ZINGARELLI.

Undeterred by the adverse criticism passed upon his Birmingham début, Costa decided to remain in England. For the next eighteen years his operations (though not as a vocalist) were exclusively confined to the operatic stage, beginning with his appointment in 1830 (a year after his Birmingham failure) as maestro al piano at the King's Theatre, under the management of Laporte. In 1832 Monck Mason, the then impresario, gave Costa, aged twenty-two, full powers as conductor, an appointment which caused Chorley to say: 'This was the year when (happy event for England!) the Italian Orchestra was placed under the direction of Signor Costa.' The late Rev. Dr. Cox, an intimate friend of Costa's, relates an amusing story of the youthful conductor's introduction to the opera company as their beardless chief. Dr. Cox says:

They one and all burst into a roar of laughter, which made the house ring; and on the following morning he received a card with seven [six] miniature razors affixed to it—which Costa would not on any account whatever part with—accompanied by a written recommendation to him to shave. This practical joke he had the good sense to take in good part; but both the singers and the band speedily discovered that, beardless as he was, they had found a master. Under previous mismanagement the orchestra had chiefly consisted of the pupils of the principal violinists, who made money by such engagements, in addition to their own salaries. This state of things Costa at once determined to abolish; and the opposition he encountered would have broken down a less firm and resolute spirit ; but he was resolved to have his own way, or retire altogether ; and Laporte, pleased with the courage he displayed, and also having heard still more of what was in him from Rubini and others who had known him in Naples, backed him up, and maintained his position with the utmost zeal.

Thus did Costa, as a mere youth, begin that great reform of the orchestra in England with which his name should be honourably kept in remembrance. The aforesaid razors he treasured until his dying day. They were exhibited and seen by the present writer at the Crystal Palace in 1897, and were described in the catalogue of the Imperial Victorian Exhibition as :

Card, with six miniature razors : silver blades, ivory handles. 1830. From the gentlemen of the orchestra, King's Theatre.

It was not until 1846 that Costa had his chance as a conductor of purely orchestral music. In that year he was appointed conductor of the Philharmonic concerts, and he absolutely revolutionized the performances given by the Society during the nine seasons he held the post. The Sacred Harmonic Society fortunately secured his services in 1848 and retained them for the long period of thirty-four years. Here too his reforming zeal showed itself when, on his appointment (in 1848) he caused the Exeter Hall organ to be tuned to equal temperament and introduced ladies into the alto section of the choir, a part which had always been sung by men—'bearded altos,' as Mendelssohn called them. With the year 1849 began Costa's long connection with the Birmingham Musical Festival—thirty-three years, twelve triennial festivals—the same Birmingham where twenty years previously he had been rebuffed by both committee-men and audiences. The misconducting of conductors at previous festivals furnished a strong contrast to the imperious and magnetic sway of the new man, to whose wonderful régime Birmingham owes not a little of its prestige and fame as a first-rank musical festival.

Mention need only be made of the Handel Festivals—1857 to 1880—which Costa engineered with never-failing resourcefulness and marvellous controlling skill ; and of his long sway as conductor of Italian opera—are not these things known and read of all men ? And then it must not be forgotten that he conducted festivals held at Bradford in 1853 and 1856 ; Glasgow in 1873, and the Leeds Festivals of 1874 and 1877.

Sir Michael Costa received the honour of knighthood in 1869 ; at that time he was the only musician thus distinguished. He has every claim to a high place in the roll of fame as an orchestral and operatic conductor. Although he had a good deal of the martinet in his methods, his devotion to the men under his baton was a fine trait in his character. He always championed their interests, and so important did he regard their valued co-operation that he was the first conductor in England to cause the names of orchestral players to be printed in concert and festival programmes generally. By his decisive beat and unflagging energy, no less than by his rigid discipline and insistence upon interpretative excellence—getting all he could out of his men—Costa laid those solid foundations of orchestral playing in England upon which present-day conductors, native and foreign, have to a large extent built their reputations, and whereby English players have attained their present position as artists of the highest rank.

The portrait of Sir Michael Costa which forms the special portrait supplement to our present issue is from a painting, by S. Rosenthal, in the possession of Messrs. Novello.

A YORKSHIRE CHOIR IN GERMANY.

During the last week of September a Yorkshire choir demonstrated in Germany some of the highest attributes of English choral singing under the direction of the master chorus-master Dr. Henry Coward. The voices, according to the official printed list, numbered 291 : of these Leeds furnished 142 and Sheffield 149, the constitution of the joint choir being :

	LEEDS.	SHEFFIELD.
Sopranos . . . . .	45	37
Altos . . . . .	32	33
Tenors . . . . .	33	40
Basses . . . . .	32	39
Grand total . . . . .	291.

The party, with a few friends, took their departure on Saturday, September 22, passing through London on their way to the scene of their triumphs. The first concert took place at the Tonhalle, Düsseldorf, on the evening of Monday, September 24. Its Part I. consisted of the oratorio 'Messiah' (in a condensed version), preceded, however, by the German National Anthem, 'Heil dir im Siegerkranz,' sung in the language of the Fatherland. Part II., which enabled the choir to furnish proof of their versatility, consisted of the following selection :

Madrigal—As Vesta was descending . . . . .	Weelkes.
Part-song—Moonlight . . . . .	Fanning.
Part-song—You stole my love . . . . .	W. Macfarren.
Chorus—The heroes of Assur . . . . .	Parry.
(Finale, Act 1, of Judith.)
Chorus—The Dance . . . . .	Elgar.
(Scenes from the Bavarian Highlands.)
English National Anthem.

The orchestral accompaniments were played by the Düsseldorf Municipal Orchestra.

On the following day (September 25) the choir journeyed to Cologne where, in the Gürzenich Hall, they performed Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' and the same miscellaneous selection as that given above and accompanied by the same orchestra. This programme was repeated in its entirety at the Saalbau, Frankfurt, on September 27, with the co-operation of the Frankfurt orchestra. The soloists at all three concerts were Miss Gertrude Lonsdale (contralto), Mr. Henry Brearley, of Leeds Parish Church choir (tenor), and Mr. Frederic Austin (bass), all of whom not only worthily maintained but increased their reputations, while Mr. John Groves, of Leeds, rendered good service at the organ.

The social functions in which the West Riding singers participated added not a little to the enjoyment of their visit to Germany. Warmly welcomed and most hospitably entertained, our well-tuned Yorkshire-folk had every reason to be gratified with the reception so enthusiastically accorded to them. May they not have added another note to the harmony of that 'entente cordiale' which, under the wise leadership of our gracious King, is doing so much to unite England with other nations in the bonds of peace and goodwill ? In this connection genial telegrams were received from King Edward and the Kaiser in response to messages sent to their respective Majesties.

On the homeward journey a deputation from the choir placed a wreath on the tomb of Beethoven at Bonn, and on Saturday, September 29, after just a week's absence, the singers returned safe and sound to their respective cities, having experienced a most enjoyable tour. In the admirable arrangements made for the comfort and convenience of so large a party, no less than in the musical and financial part of the proceedings, special and honourable mention must be made of Mr. Henry C. Embleton, of Leeds, the chairman of the committee, a true-hearted friend of music and an enthusiast of good report. He had a most able and valuable colleague in Mr. W. L. Lindlar, of Sheffield, who rendered splendid service in many ways, and unstinted co-operation was given by the other members of the small committee who admirably discharged their intricate but pleasant duties—Messrs. Joshua H. Lawson and A. S. Burrows (Sheffield), and Messrs. G. Norley and W. Whitehead (Leeds).

That Dr. Coward was in his element goes without saying. There is no need to enlarge upon his great gifts, as he still holds the title 'master chorus-master' bestowed upon him in this journal some years ago; but it may not be without interest to quote a few sentences from the report of an interview with him, from the Daily News of October 1, after the return of the party from Germany:

'I am more than satisfied with the results,' said Dr. Coward, 'with the work of the choir, and with the upholding of the prestige of England in musical composition, and in rendering. Also with the remarkably good feeling prevailing. Because you must bear in mind that the idea which animated the Committee was the promotion of good feeling between the two countries, quite as much as the maintenance of English musical prestige. Our reception surpassed expectations. You never saw such enthusiasm.

'Every member of the choir paid £4 towards the expenses. Some who are not rich had been saving up their money for weeks. We have persons of various occupations in the choir; some work in shops and some in telegraph offices, and some are able to drive their carriage and pair; but all gladly gave their £4 towards the work of promoting a good feeling between the two countries.'

Some extracts from the German press, from translations which appeared in the Yorkshire Post, may conclude this brief record of an important event in the history of English choral music:

In the blending and grouping of the voices the Choir showed a wonderful quality of sound, which they used with great ease and suppleness. Dr. Henry Coward, the director of the Yorkshire Choir, is an excellent choir-master, who thoroughly understands sound effects.—Düsseldorfer Tageblatt.

Good music need not necessarily be tedious. The proof of this has been given us by the English Choir. The soloists—Miss Lonsdale, Mr. Brearley, and Mr. Austin—make one feel throughout their singing in the oratorio that they are framed by a great work of art, which never for one moment loses sight of the main idea of its artistic conception.—Düsseldorfer Neueste Nachrichten.

The Englishman does not think so much of what he has to sing, but he gives his whole attention to the manner in which he sings it. The whole manner of singing—the attack and the setting free, the firm, faultless sustaining of the sounds, and the rich art shading which was shown in the soft and delicate passages, fell on the ears like melodious crystal bells. In this choir there is no one mute and useless. Every one of the members constituting this choir sings as if he or she were the leader. It is astonishing how exactly and minutely Dr. Coward has his singers under his control; how finely the voices blend and shade, and how simply and naturally they declaim without falling into mannerisms. It is almost unnecessary to say that their intonation, even in the most difficult passages, did not display the slightest fault.—Kölnische Zeitung.

The ladies and gentlemen members of the choir constitute a vocal power of quite exceptional freshness and compass. Besides this they have been so splendidly trained by their exceedingly gifted conductor, Dr. Coward, that they respond to his slightest movement instantly and with the most perfect precision. Not only the method of rendering but also the carefully selected compositions themselves offered much that was interesting, particularly the chief number on the programme Sir Edward Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius.'—Frankfurter Zeitung.

A tastefully printed 'Souvenir,' containing much information of this visit to Germany, was presented to each member of the chorus by Mr. W. Whitehead, of Leeds, who, like Mr. Embleton, is a good friend to choral music. From all accounts the word 'success' may be writ large on a great undertaking that reflected credit on all concerned.

JULIUS STOCKHAUSEN.

The death of Julius Stockhausen—at Frankfort-on-Main, on September 22, at the age of eighty—has closed the career of a most distinguished baritone singer. A pupil of Manuel Garcia, he gave abundant proof of his versatility in splendid renderings of the Prophet's music in 'Elijah' and the baritone solos of the 'St. Matthew' Passion, in his opera impersonations, and in his unrivalled interpretations of the Lieder of Schubert and Schumann, which peculiarly suited him and which he sang in a very remarkable way. As Sir George Grove has well said: 'The rich beauty of the voice, the nobility of style, the perfect phrasing, the intimate sympathy, and, not least, the intelligible way in which the words were given—in itself one of his greatest claims to distinction—all combined to make his singing of songs a wonderful event.' Herr Stockhausen was also a gifted teacher of singing; indeed, so highly did Wagner esteem his qualifications as a voice trainer that he tried to induce Stockhausen to join the teaching staff of the school of music which he (Wagner) was re-organizing at Munich. To the record of his great gifts as a master singer and teacher must be added his wide musicianship—violinist, violoncellist, pianist, organist and conductor (vocal and orchestral). In this last-named connection he held the post of Director of the Philharmonic concerts at Hamburg from 1862 to 1869, and from 1874 to 1878 he conducted the Vocal Society of Berlin (founded by Stern, Sternsches Gesangverein) which, as Grove says, 'under his genial and able direction rose to the highest point of excellence.'

Church and Organ Music.

CHURCH MUSIC AT THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL.

The creation of a bishopric of Birmingham has caused the old church of St. Philip in that city to become the cathedral of the new diocese. It was in this sacred edifice that the first Birmingham Musical Festival was held in the year 1768, and within its walls, even after the day of small things had developed into an important music-making, the sacred works continued to be performed until the opening of the Town Hall in 1834. Up to that time the Festival performances were opened by a 'Full Cathedral Service' in St. Philip's church. An extract from an account of the festival of 1820, conducted by Mr. Greateorex, from the Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review, may be given as showing the scope and importance of this opening service in former times:

The festival commenced with the celebration of divine service, at the church of St. Philip, in the manner of the cathedrals. A double choir of sixty-five selected voices, on each side, performed the vocal parts, the principal solos, quartets, &c., being sustained by MISS STEPHENS, MISS TRAVIS, MISS SYMONDS, MESSRS. KNYVETT, VAUGHAN, and BELLAMY. The service commenced by ORLANDO GIBBONS'S full anthem, Hosannah to the Son of David. It is almost needless to state that there was no accompanying instrument but the organ. The psalms, chanted by one hundred and thirty such voices, had an uncommonly fine effect. TRAVERS'S Te Deum and CROFT'S Jubilate were selected, and the Gloria Patri was by BLOW and COOKE. Before the sermon, MISS STEPHENS sang MARTIN LUTHER'S hymn, to which the vast volume and rich purity of her voice gave complete effect, and DR. GREEN'S anthem, O God of my righteousness, was also performed. The anthem after the sermon was PURCELL'S O give thanks. DR. BOYCE'S Hallelujah chorus concluded the service, which has rarely, if ever, been equalled in novelty, grandeur, and sublimity of effect. In the absence of the Bishop of Oxford, the sermon was preached by the Rev. Charles Curtis, rector of St. Martin's, Birmingham, and the discourse was in behalf of the charity. The Rev. Robert Clifton, rector of St. Nicholas, in Worcester, chanted the service, and the collection was made by the Countesses of Dartmouth, Grosvenor, Galloway, and Clonmell, together with other ladies of distinction, on this and the succeeding mornings. We notice these facts to shew with what promptitude and public spirit the objects of the meeting are studied and promoted.

The first recorded organist of St. Philip's Church (circa 1715) was Barnabas Gunn, who became organist of Gloucester Cathedral and to whose 'Two cantatas and six songs' Handel was a subscriber. Mr. Gunn's successor appears to have been William de St. Thunes, and it seems strange that the bearer of such a high-sounding name should have been obliged to discharge the duties of sexton in addition to those of organist, even 'for considerations of economy'—but doubtless William de St. Thunes buried his pride rather than lose the emoluments attached to his dual office. For nearly forty years (1765-1803) the organistship was held by Jeremiah Clarke, who became organist of Worcester Cathedral in 1806, an office he held for one year only. By the way, this Jeremiah Clarke must not be confused with the St. Paul's Cathedral organist of that name and the composer of 'St. Magnus'—he who 'shot himself with a little Screw-Pistol in the side of the Head' in consequence of a love affair.

With historical knowledge of the Birmingham Musical Festivals held in St. Philip's church, it was a happy thought of the newly-appointed organist, Mr. Edwin Stephenson, to resuscitate for the festival of 1906 the 'Full cathedral service' of former times by arranging with the Rev. W. H. Carnegie, rector of the cathedral church, four special services. These took the form of Evening Prayer at 5 p.m. on Tuesday, October 2, and three following days. The services were:

Stainer in E flat.	Wareing in G.
Stanford in B flat.	Walmisley in D minor.

and the anthems:

If ye love me . . . . .	Thomas Tallis.
Call to remembrance . . .	Richard Farrant.
O Lord, increase my faith .	Orlando Gibbons.
God is a Spirit . . . . .	Sterndale Bennett.

In some interesting notes on 'The cathedral and the Birmingham Musical Festivals' Mr. Stephenson says: 'The erection of St. Philip's into a cathedral church has suggested the revival of the ancient connection between the sacred edifice and the Musical Festivals.' We hope that this commendable revival will be repeated at future festivals held in the cathedral city of Birmingham.

MUSIC AT THE CHURCH CONGRESS.

It may be that there was nothing more to be said on Church music beyond what has already been said at the Church Congress—now rapidly approaching its jubilee. For this reason perhaps the subject did not receive special attention at the great clerical meeting recently held at Barrow-in-Furness. Two papers were, however, read on 'The place and limitations of music in public worship'—one by the Rev. W. G. Pennyman, vicar of Bishopsthorpe and chaplain to the Archbishop of York, the other by Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, acting organist of Carlisle Cathedral. The most interesting, certainly the most practical part of the reverend gentleman's discourse, even if oft-told, was that in which he referred to the singing of hymns and psalms. He said (to quote from the Guardian report):

HYMNS AND PSALMS.

Do we take sufficient trouble about the rendering of them? I know that it is the fashion nowadays to abuse hymns, but for my part I love them, and I believe that most congregations love them too. Doubtless some of them contain bad poetry, and some even bad theology, but there remain more than a few that are singularly beautiful—hymns which contain words and thoughts which have comforted and helped many a breaking heart and which bring solace and joy to many a soul to-day: and the same with the Psalms, there are many which are instinct with life and hope, and which in their wonderful variety supply every mood. There is the outburst of praise, there is the tender note of pathos; they seem to breathe with the pent-up feelings of humanity; and I cannot conceive anything more inspiring or more uplifting than to hear such Psalms and hymns really well sung, sung with meaning and expression; and it appears to me to be a strange ignorance which can tolerate the careless, slipshod, and almost irreverent rendering of them that one sometimes hears. Therefore we say it again, that the first and last condition of music in public worship is that it be religious. It must breathe an atmosphere of religion, it must shed forth a religious impulse. There must be the real ring of sincerity about it; it should not be a mere performance, but a religious act. It should make one feel a better man, it should be the voice which gives language to the spirit of worship which is in one.

Mr. Nicholson, in his thoughtful paper, touched upon an important point in his reference to the inadequate salaries paid to church organists. Under the heading 'The part of the congregation in the musical services of the church,' he said:

In churches where the music is entirely congregational it is possible for all to concentrate their efforts on its improvement by direct personal effort. In churches where a choir exists the work of the singers, organist and choirmaster is in itself an act of worship, if worthily given. But how are those who have no active part in such music to take their share in it? Well, there are at least two ways. First of all, it is perfectly possible to join in the singing of a choir silently with the mind, though, of course, to do so carefully involves a distinct mental effort. Worship without the exercise of the intelligence is impossible, but worship without making a sound is perfectly possible; otherwise how is it that we can join silently in many of the prayers? Secondly, all can take part in church music by giving to its support. Just as people will subscribe to make their churches beautiful, so they should subscribe to make their music beautiful. Contrast this with the beggarly provision usually made. The salaries of organists to-day are a standing disgrace to the laity of the Church of England—the laity, I say, not the clergy. And yet I believe that, on the whole, there is no body of men who more ungrudgingly and unselfishly give their time and labour to Church work than our organists and choirmasters. The majority on appointment do not ask, 'What is the minimum of practices required?' but 'How often can I get the choir together?' It is not in every profession that men consider it a privilege to be allowed to work overtime!

DR. JOHN WORGAN.

A mural brass has been placed by the London section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians in the church of St. Andrew Undershaft, Leadenhall Street, to the memory of Dr. John Worgan, organist of the church from 1749 to 1790. On the occasion of the unveiling of the memorial (on October 13) a special service was held, at which an organ voluntary, two hymn-tunes and an anthem were selected from the compositions of the old organist, who, however, made his mark as a performer on the organ rather than as a creative musician. Dr. Worgan's remains were interred at St. Andrew Undershaft in August, 1790, the organ at his funeral being played by his pupil Charles Wesley, son of the great hymn-writer and elder brother of Samuel Wesley.

WESLEY'S HYMN-TUNES 'AURELIA' AND 'EDEN.'

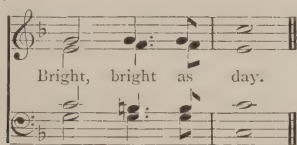

The Rev. F. G. Wesley writes in regard to 'Aurelia,' the history of which was given in our October issue :

DEAR SIR,—In one respect, I feel sure, Dr. Pyne's recollections of 'Aurelia' are erroneous. The tune was written for the hymn beginning 'Jerusalem the golden,' and it was in consequence of the words that my mother, on a name being asked for, suggested Aurelia on the occasion described by Dr. Pyne.

I am, Yours faithfully,

Durham, F. G. WESLEY.
October 20, 1906.

More than one correspondent has called our attention to a variant in the tune 'Eden' ('There is a happy land') compared with the version in Kemble's 'Psalms and Hymns,' and printed in our October issue, p. 678. This variant occurs in the ninth line (of words) thus :

and as it appears in 'The European Psalmist,' issued by Wesley eight years after the above-mentioned book, it is evidently an afterthought of the composer's. There may be many, however, who prefer the original form of the tune as given in THE MUSICAL TIMES.

FESTIVAL SERVICE AT WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

On the evening of September 27 a festival service was held, in which the choirs of Chichester, Salisbury and Winchester Cathedrals took part. The settings of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis—in B flat, for double choir—were by T. A. Walmisley, sung unaccompanied. Four anthems were sung :

Almighty and everlasting God . . . . . Gibbons.
(Sung without accompaniment.)
Lift up thine eyes round about . . . . . Goss.
O give thanks unto the Lord . . . . . S. S. Wesley.
The Lord is my Shepherd . . . . . G. B. Arnold.

The organ voluntaries were Mendelssohn's Sonata No. 2, played by Mr. F. J. W. Crowe (Chichester); S. S. Wesley's Andante in G, played by Mr. C. F. South (Salisbury); and Bach's Prelude and Fugue in D, played by Mr. G. C. Macklin, assistant-organist of Winchester Cathedral. Dr. Prendergast, organist of Winchester Cathedral, accompanied throughout, except Goss's anthem, and conducted the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis. This festival service is intended to be an annual event, held in rotation at the three cathedrals interested therein. We wish it all success.

We regret to record the death, on October 3, at the Manor House, St. David's, of WILLIAM PEREGRINE PROPERT, LL.D., M.A., Mus. Bac. (Cantab.) and Mus. Bac. (Oxon.), J.P., aged seventy-five. Dr. Propert had been connected with St. David's Cathedral as chorister, lay vicar-choral, and organist for more than sixty-five years. Dr. Propert was a highly-cultured and many-sided man. Amid many other activities he carried on at St. David's a series of meteorological observations of much accuracy and importance, extending over a period of thirty years, and his wide legal knowledge gained him a great reputation as an expert adviser throughout South Wales.

At a special service held at St. Margaret's Parish Church, King's Lynn—of which Dr. Burney was formerly organist,—held on October 12, Stanford's Te Deum in B flat (Op. 66) was sung by Mr. Arthur Shirley's choir (eighty-eight voices) to the accompaniment of organ, pianoforte, brass instruments, and drums. The quartet from Sullivan's 'Light of the world' ('Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death') was sung In Memoriam Mr. Arthur H. Cross, organist of Sandringham Parish Church, whose death took place recently. Mr. G. Dines was at the organ, and Mr. Arthur Shirley, organist of King's Lynn fine old Parish Church, conducted.

Upon his resignation of the post of organist and choirmaster at St. Stephen's Church, South Kensington, which he has held for twenty-one years, Dr. Hamilton Robinson was the recipient of a handsome presentation of silver from the churchwardens and congregation, together with an appreciative address from the church council, and valuable gifts of books, including the new 'Oxford History of Music,' from the gentlemen and boys (past and present) of the choir.

Trinity Church, St. John's, New Brunswick, now contains a fine four-manual organ erected at a cost of $10,000. The instrument—rebuilt and greatly enlarged by Messrs. Casavant Brothers, of St. Hyacinthe (P.Q.)—is worthily presided over by Mr. James S. Ford, organist of the church.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare, judging from newspapers received from Australia, has been giving organ recitals at Sydney Town Hall with marked success to large and appreciative audiences.

Reviews.

Modern Music and Musicians. By R. A. Streatfeild.

[Methuen & Co.]

This volume commences with Palestrina, after which follow Purcell, Bach and Handel, then the great composers of the so-called classical and romantic periods, and so on through Verdi and Wagner, Berlioz and Liszt, up to and including Richard Strauss. The earlier composers are generally spoken of as 'old masters,' and therefore would seem to be out of place in a volume bearing the above title; but the author remarks that 'to the union of rhythm with harmony modern music owes its birth,' and that justifies the inclusion of music of the 16th, and still more so of the 17th and 18th centuries.

The author's aim in writing the book was not to relate the lives of great composers, or to discuss their art-work, excepting so far as these served to trace 'the growth of a poetic basis in music.' Thus once more we are face to face with the vexed question of programme versus abstract music. The fact is duly recognized that 'programme' music existed before Haydn, but the author considers his attitude towards the 'poetic basis in music' of importance; he indeed thinks Haydn might well be called, not only the 'father of the symphony,' but the 'father of the symphonic poem.' Mozart never gave a name to any of his works, so it seems very probable that in the titles 'Eroica,' 'Pastoral,' Beethoven was influenced to some extent by those which Haydn placed at the head of many of his symphonies. Beethoven, of course, plays an important rôle in the discussion, and Mr. Streatfeild justly says that all that great master wrote after he reached maturity is programme music.

It is easy to understand the great admiration shown towards Schumann, and the cold attitude towards Brahms, but we must turn to the last chapter dealing with Richard Strauss, 'round whom rages most fiercely the never-ceasing battle between conservatives and radicals.' The author regards that composer's view as differing materially from that of his predecessors in that 'his programmes are purely psychological.' And once more he believes that in twenty years the present conservatives, attacking some new invader, will proclaim Strauss as the representative of 'the final boundary of the legitimate in music.' So enthusiastic a partisan of Strauss and his methods makes for good. He speaks with no uncertain voice. The strong admirers and the strong haters are the men upon whom depends the issue of the battle. Mr. Streatfeild has the courage of his opinions, and those musicians who do not share them will appreciate his boldness. The book, in which, by the way, there are twenty-four excellent illustrations, shows that the author has studied much and earnestly: he has therefore written a book which stimulates thought.

Organ Music by Various Composers.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

To the well-known series 'Original Compositions for the Organ' has been added a series of six pieces composed by Mr. H. M. Higgs, and severally entitled Toccata, Canzone, Introduction and fugato, Duo in canon, Elegie, and Grand Chœur. Without entering into the details of these varied compositions, it may be sufficient to say that they maintain their author's reputation for writing effective organ music, whether regarded from a constructive or interpretative point of view. Johann Ernst Eberlin was a contemporary of Bach and organist of Salzburg Cathedral at the time of Mozart's birth in that city. Like our own Samuel Wesley, Eberlin was a fuguist, and here before us are two specimens of his handiwork in a Toccata and fugue in D minor, and one in A minor, both of which will repay the attention of organists who take a serious view of their vocation. The same remark applies to two Preludes and fugues—in F sharp minor and F major—by Dietrich Buxtehude, remarkably fine works which, like the Eberlin pieces, have been carefully edited by Mr. John E. West. Players seeking a pleasing, soft voluntary will find it in a Pastorale in D, composed by Mr. Frederick W. Priest, who has imparted variety thereto by changes of rhythm and key. Padre Martini was an eminent theorist and a composer of repute. When Dr. Burney visited him in 1770 he had 'a very bad cough, swelled legs, and a sickly countenance'; his Organ sonata in G minor, however, bears no traces of infirmity in its movements. It begins with a prelude and fugue, to which follows an Adagio in the same key, the concluding sections being a semiquaverous Allegro, and a pretty little Sarabande which gives a genial finish to a work that has more than one feature of interest. Gregorians are so much beloved in certain circles that organists so disposed may feel drawn to a five-part Prelude and fugue on a Kyrie 'Orbis factor,' by Mr. Anthony H. Pollen. A charming Impromptu—all too short in its melodic naïveté—by Mr. A. M. Goodhart, of Eton, is sure to find its way into recital programmes as an attractive piece for the soft stops.

'Copied down from an improvisation recorded in a phonograph in 1895' is the novel foot-note appended to an Impromptu composed by Mr. Edwin H. Lemare, a composition which furnishes evidence of the distinguished organist's powers of extemporization. Would that the delightful improvisations of Dr. Hopkins at the Temple Church had been similarly phonographed! To return to Mr. Lemare. A Symphony in D minor (Op. 50) by him is a work of a very different calibre. Cast in four movements—Maestoso con fuoco, Adagio patetico, Scherzo, and Allegro giusto—this well thought-out composition is one that makes full demands upon the executive ability of the performer; at the same time its study, even if regarded only from the technique point of view, will amply repay those who seek to master its complexities.

Two Yorkshire organists have furnished a like number of pieces to the recital series of original compositions edited by Mr. Lemare: Dr. Bairstow, of Leeds Parish Church, is responsible for a Scherzo in A flat, and Mr. H. A. Fricker, of Leeds Town Hall, for a Concert overture in C minor. This pair of pieces, sharply contrasted in style, are sure to merit the attention they deserve, for they have been composed by able executants who thoroughly understand the wonderful capabilities of the modern organ.

Annals of Covent Garden Theatre, from 1732 to 1897. Two volumes, with forty-five illustrations. By Henry Saxe Wyndham.

[Chatto & Windus.]

By adopting the title 'Annals' Mr. Saxe Wyndham disarms criticism on his book regarded from an historical point of view. An adequate history of Covent Garden Theatre would fill more than two volumes, and the dramatic and more important associations of the house should be kept distinct from its musical interest. Therefore the book under notice must be accepted as a more or less chatty account of the famous theatre, and in this respect it fulfils its intent. The musical references include the operas of Handel, Arne, Arnold, Shield, Bishop and others, including the production of Weber's 'Oberon'—some of these in the two old Theatres, both destroyed by fire—and of Italian opera in more recent years in the present building. By the way, Mr. Saxe Wyndham (vol. ii., p. 36) omits the name of Mrs. Keeley (Mary Anne Goward) from the original cast of Weber's 'Oberon' on April 12, 1826. The circumstances under which that versatile actress, at short notice, sang the well-known Mermaid's song in the opera were fully stated, as recorded from her own lips, in THE MUSICAL TIMES of April, 1899. The names of musical folk who cross the boards, so to speak, of these volumes include, in addition to those already mentioned, Boyce, Henry Carey, Beard, Dibdin, Braham, Incledon, S. Wesley, Paganini, Malibran, in addition to many other opera singers of meteor-like fame in their day. Mr. Saxe Wyndham's volumes will form a pleasant fireside companion on a winter's evening, and the numerous illustrations will recall many an interesting event connected with Covent Garden Theatre—the old houses and the present building.

THE BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The festival opened, according to invariable custom, with Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' A blind adherence to a stereotyped tradition is not always admirable, but if ever there were excuse for it, it is in the case of Birmingham's loyalty to a work which has furnished its festival with its most important landmark, and the excuse had this time a special validity, since it is just sixty years since the oratorio was first produced at the Birmingham festival of 1846. Naturally the performance of so familiar a work does not call for detailed criticism. But what the critic always finds interesting is the opportunity afforded by this opening performance (on October 2) of forming some idea of the quality of the chorus. This is necessarily a shifting quantity, and I can recall marked fluctuations at Birmingham as elsewhere. There were festivals—those of 1888 and 1891 come to my mind—in which I heard some of the most finished singing and most beautiful tone possible to imagine. Then came a falling away, and now one is glad to think the tide is again rising. There was a noteworthy improvement three years ago, and I think it was more than maintained at the recent festival, when was heard some of the most musical, refined, and highly-finished chorus-singing within my experience. The Birmingham tenors are unrivalled for fine quality,—it is said that the choir-master can afford to reject all voices that are not of pure tenor quality. The basses were exceedingly fine; they have not quite the ring of the Yorkshire basses, but their volume of tone was magnificent and impressive. The sopranos were also very good, and only a little stronger stamina, which would have made the trying altitudes of Beethoven's great Mass more easily compassed, was wanting to render them altogether exempt from unfavourable criticism. The contraltos were not conspicuous,—the character of the voice precludes it,—but were worthy of a chorus that was well balanced in its ensemble as well as excellent in its parts. Throughout the week it showed a familiarity with its task, for which Mr. R. H. Wilson, the Manchester choir-master, deserves a chief share of the praise, for he had evidently done his work most thoroughly.

While dealing with the executive forces, I may add that Dr. Richter had command over an orchestra of 124 performers, the bulk of them being members of the Hallé Orchestra, but leavened by many London players. It is perhaps worthy of note, in view of criticisms one occasionally hears, that a vast majority of the names were English. The leadership was taken jointly by Mr. Schiever and Mr. Rawdon Briggs. Why the organist should have a line to himself in the programme more than any other member of the band is no doubt assignable to historical reasons. People of a sarcastic disposition might possibly suggest that it was because of his great opportunities for evil; in which case the highest praise that can be awarded Mr. C. W. Perkins is to say, as one may with perfect truth, that one felt rather than heard his share in the ensemble, for he used his instrument with the utmost reserve and judgment.

Coming now to the programme, we may first turn our attention to the new works, for these are what go farthest to prove the vitality and usefulness of a festival. The interest of musicians and the general public alike in the festival seemed to centre in Sir Edward Elgar's new oratorio, 'The Kingdom.' Time was when the largest audiences were always secured by the most familiar works, but now this rule has been abrogated, at least so far as it concerns Elgar. 'The Kingdom,' attracted the largest audience of the week, and the demand for places in the hall may be imagined from the fact that 'standing places at one guinea each' were advertised in the local papers a few days beforehand! 'The Kingdom,' some description of which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES for October, is a sequel to 'The Apostles,' and from internal evidence, as well as from the scheme outlined in the preface to the earlier work, it would seem as if a further extension were contemplated. Certainly what appears to me as the least satisfactory feature of 'The Kingdom' is a certain sense of inconclusiveness. It continues the story of the little band of Christians, the Apostles, and the disciples, from the time when their Master's bodily presence was taken out of their sight, and, after presenting to us the descent of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost, that signalled the birth of the infant Church, it leaves us with the disciples in the Upper Room, engaged in carrying out their Lord's commands in the breaking of the bread and the prayers. The effect of this termination, with a choral setting of the most purely devotional kind of the Lord's Prayer, is that, while deeply impressed, one is left like Oliver Twist asking for more. It is certainly to be hoped that the composer may be further inspired to complete his original design, and carry this great and original Christian epic to a decisive issue. I have referred to the quiet, devotional character of this final chorus, but if it militates against the musical impression made by the work as a whole, it is only one illustration of the absolute sincerity with which the composer has approached his task. To my mind the strength of 'The Kingdom'—perhaps even more than in the case of 'The Apostles'—lies in the wonderful power with which Sir Edward Elgar has gone to the heart of every situation: has realized the inner meaning as well as the outward atmosphere of each scene. As in 'The Apostles,' he has made a network of leading motives the groundwork of his music, and of these the large majority have already been heard in the previous work, so that the sequence of the later one is made plain. The general character of the music is less mystical, it leaves the impression of being simpler and more diatonic, while the choruses are conceived on broader lines. That which forms the conclusion of the first part, 'O ye priests,' is remarkable for its vigorous directness, and the conclusion of the Pentecostal scene is equally powerful and developed at unusual length, for Sir Edward Elgar is not always so careful to make as much of a situation from the purely musical side as in this case, where he has allowed the music to make its fullest impression, yet without in any respect interfering with the logical continuity which it is his first anxiety to preserve. Of the power and individuality of the oratorio there can be no doubt, and it is not too much to assert that no other composer could have done what he has accomplished in setting to music these episodes in the history of the Christian Church. The performance was distinctly the best that a new choral work by Elgar has ever received. If not quite free from hesitancy, it went very smoothly, and the principals could hardly have been bettered. These were Miss Agnes Nicholls (The Blessed Virgin), Miss Muriel Foster (Mary Magdalene), Mr. John Coates (St. John), and Mr. William Higley (St. Peter).

'The Kingdom' was given on Wednesday morning, October 3, and on the preceding evening 'The Apostles' was heard, so that the connection of the two was made the more plain. The composer secured a really brilliant performance of 'The Apostles,' and, in addition to the singers first named, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies resumed his original part of Christ, while an element of novelty was afforded by the appearance of Mr. Charles Clark, who gave a tremendously, almost terribly, forcible presentment of the character of Judas.

Birmingham is fortunate in having attracted some distinguished musicians of late. Sir Edward Elgar is Professor of her new University, and another important post has been filled by Mr. Granville Bantock, one of the most brilliant of the younger generation of composers. Mr. Bantock's special idiosyncrasy is his devotion to the East, which has culminated in his feat of setting the whole of the Ruba'iyat of 'Omar Khayyam' (according to Fitzgerald) for soloists, chorus and orchestra. Of this the first and principal portion, including fifty-four of the 101 quatrains, was heard for the first time at the festival. The difficult task of securing variety in the treatment of these uniform stanzas has been cleverly surmounted by personifying the Poet, the Beloved, and the Philosopher, and giving to them their appropriate stanzas, the chorus being used freely, either as representing the bystanders, or as a 'chorus' in the classical sense, to whom are entrusted such sayings as will bear a collective utterance. Where the composer has handicapped himself in is undertaking to set the entire poem, for some stanzas bear musical interpretation much more readily than others, and the difference is felt in the comparative spontaneity of the various episodes. Thus the 'philosophical' passages fail to convince in the same manner as the amatory and, as I might call them, the pictorial episodes. The brilliance, the resourcefulness, the originality of the music are quite undeniable, and were it pruned of what on a first hearing seems redundant, its many good qualities would be far more apparent. Even so obvious a picture as that of a desert caravan Mr. Bantock has realized, not only with vividness and charm, but with individuality, and some of the languorous love music is delightful. The orchestra is used with masterly power, the effects are elaborate and strange but never forced, for Mr. Bantock knows what each instrument can give, and does not demand from it what is either ineffective or impossible. The work is complicated and difficult, and the performance, which took place on October 4, left something to be desired in point of clearness of detail, while the three soloists, Madame Ada Crossley, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Dalton Baker, though they sang artistically, were not heard to complete advantage.

Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's setting of Poe's 'Bells' for chorus and what he advisedly styles a 'grand' orchestra, next claims attention. Whether the poem is one which would seem to call for a musical setting is arguable, but there can be no doubt that Mr. Holbrooke has shown himself in complete sympathy with all the vivid pictures it suggests. Sledge bells, wedding-bells, alarum bells, iron bells—these are all illustrated with distinct imaginative power. The composer uses an orchestra whose dimensions approach the extravagant, but there would be no occasion to reproach him for a matter obviously within his discretion did the result justify the means. I seriously doubt, however, if this is the case, and think so clever a colourist might have made a more limited palette equally effective. I would go further, and express my belief that the appeal would have been more poetic had he depended on suggestion rather than upon the realism which his huge force of percussion instruments induces. For some special effects a soprano concertina is employed—surely its first appearance in an orchestra?—but though it duly appeared I am unable to say that its influence was perceptible. Some of Mr. Holbrooke's music has a suspicion of crudity, but there is real power and imagination underlying it; it has the saving grace of ideas, which atones for many shortcomings in their expression. Mr. Holbrooke, who is not a practical conductor, very wisely entrusted the direction of the performance to Dr. Richter, who caught well the general character and broad effects of the music.

The fourth and last novelty was Mr. Percy Pitt's Sinfonietta, an exceedingly able piece of work, which a few periods of repose would greatly improve. The reason for the diminutive form of title may be ascribed to either the composer's modesty or the circumstance that there are only three movements, for as a matter of fact each movement is unusually elaborate, and the whole work takes forty minutes in performance. In interest it increases as it progresses, and the first movement would certainly bear both condensation and lightening. It is too strenuous throughout, too crowded with material, and does not seem so spontaneous as its successors. In the Intermezzo quintuple rhythm is happily employed, and the Finale, a sort of Rondo, is distinguished by the interest of its subjects and the brilliance of their treatment. The Sinfonietta was exceedingly well played under the direction of the composer, and furnished a convincing proof of his exceptional power as a writer for the orchestra. If he will only be less prodigal of his resources and consider the æsthetic value of points of repose, he should accomplish great things. Both the above novelties were produced at the evening concert on October 3.

The great event of the festival was, beyond a doubt, the performance of Beethoven's colossal Mass on the Friday morning. All concerned, from Dr. Richter downwards, did their utmost, and the result was the most deeply impressive reading within my recollection. Richter realizes almost better than any other the majesty and depth of Beethoven, and while I have heard the work perhaps more brilliantly given I have never listened to a performance which seemed to go so far into the heart of the matter. The chorus sang finely, and the sopranos left only the slightest sense of effort in attacking their exhausting passages. But the great merit of the performance was that one lost sight of technique and had one's attention firmly fixed on the essential qualities of the music; there was no straining for effect, but only a desire to worthily interpret a masterpiece. The solo quartet, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Robert Radford, was altogether admirable. Miss Nicholls deserves a special word of praise for her highly-artistic singing, and Mr. Radford's fine voice, of true bass quality, gave remarkable dignity to his part. Young Mischa Elman played the violin solo in the Benedictus most artistically, but one felt he was too young in spirit to quite realize the nature of his task. In Bach's motet for double chorus, 'Sing ye to the Lord,' we had a fine piece of unaccompanied singing, forceful yet always perfectly musical. Of the more familiar choral works 'Elijah' met with the best treatment, receiving an exceptionally fine interpretation, full of colour, bright and well polished. The 'Messiah,' one is sorry to say, was less satisfactory, a feeling of slackness pervading the whole performance. Stanford's 'Revenge' was well sung, if hardly with the freedom of declamation it demands, and the 'Hymn of Praise' furnished a popular finale to the festival.

The most noteworthy orchestral performances were of Brahms's first Symphony and the 'Don Juan' and 'Tod und Verklärung' of Richard Strauss. Three of Wagner's overtures and the 'Carnaval Romain' of Berlioz were brilliantly played, and Mischa Elman gave artistic and wonderfully mature readings of Beethoven's and Tchaikovsky's Violin concertos, the latter receiving a really superb interpretation, fully realizing its exuberant emotion without conveying any sense of exaggeration. In addition to the vocalists already named, Madame Albani, Miss Gleeson-White—who sang a fine air from 'Euryanthe' with much dramatic fire—and Mr. John Harrison took part. A word is due to Miss Agnes Nicholls for her extremely brilliant singing of a fine, florid air from 'Il Seraglio,' and Miss Muriel Foster, who, to the grief of all musicians, is soon to retire from her brilliant public career, made her farewell to the Birmingham festival in a most interesting solo cantata by Christian Ritter, 'O amantissime sponse Jesu.' This precursor of Bach and Handel is little more than a name to us, but the cantata, which has recently been revived, and edited by Mr. Richard Buchmayer, reveals a great power of expressing quiet devotional sentiment. Few artists could make it as interesting as did Miss Foster, and her noble, moving interpretation intensified one's sense of the loss which her retirement will cause.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAL CONGRESS AT BASLE.

Basle, October 1.

Wealth, remarkably devoid of ostentation, is the keynote of Basle. The following population figures show its modern development: 1610, 16,120; 1905, 112,000. Its wealth comes partly from water-power and its own manufactures of silk, linen, cotton, &c. (especially silk ribbons), and more directly from international transit-trade. Its dignity comes from long centuries of political and literary cultivation. Founded in 374 as 'Basilea,' Valentinian's imperial camp. Under bishop rule from the 4th century till the Reformation. A free city of German Empire from the 10th century. Built its cathedral in 1010, which became Protestant in 1529. Had strong trade guilds from the 13th century. After Pisa and Constance, seat of the militant Church Parliament or Council (1431-1443). Was given a University by Pius II. (Aeneas Sylvius), copying Bologna, in 1459. With Zürich and Berne, the centre of the Zwingli movement. The home of the early printers, and the printing-place of Luther's works. Has always been a seat of merchant princes, almost an inland Venice.

The newly-arrived Congress member, it is to be noted, pays 6s., which gives him a pass for everything in the Congress, access to a club-house (Lesegesellschaft) and the principal sights and shows of the town, and in hand a bundle of new literature (itself seemingly worth the sum) presented by the Reception-Committee. The 'Festschrift,' pp. 238 crown 8vo and eleven new plates (Basle University Press), appears to be imitated from the 1901 Festschrift of the 400th Free-Basle anniversary, and is really a valuable book. A 'Guide to Basle' included in the packet sends him on a philosophic walk through the old German town, where he finds always the self-restrained qualities named above, Universal cleanliness, well-kept public grounds, comfort, quiet enjoyment of life, polite manners. On the other hand, the best shops with sparsely dressed windows; the important guild-halls over small restaurants; nothing very picturesque except the sickle-curve of the Rhine seen from the chestnut-tree Cathedral Terrace (Pfalz), and the far views of the Black Forest and Jura hills; no noteworthy buildings except the world-famed two-spired red-stone cathedral on the river-bank, and the Gothic Town Hall (1508-1521) at the market-place. History again gives the clue. After about a century of great pugnacity as a free-lance—among other things the Baslois threw the Papal legate who came to excommunicate them into the river and drowned him—the town joined the Swiss Confederacy, and settled down to industrial staidness. Four hundred and five years of this, and a good geographical position, have made it the wealthiest town in Switzerland. But running into the other extreme as sectarians, the Protestant body (two-thirds of the population and its most influential part) has risen itself into fragments; so that every street has two or three meeting-houses. Also, from much the same ground-cause, the number of separate learned societies and missions far exceeds that in any other town of the size in the world, and the literary man must have a prodigious subscription list. All this favours mental activity, but is against communal display. Basle forms the centre of a railway cross-fish, with rays pointing all round outside Switzerland, to Paris, Brussels, Cologne, Hamburg, Berlin, Munich, Vienna, Milan, and Lyons, and is thus called the Clapham Junction of Europe; yet its trains run at present in and out from a shanty. The University is 447 years old and has known its Erasmus, Froben, Oecolampadius, Holbein, Iselin, Euler, Bernoulli, &c.; yet its important library in Schönbeinstrasse (220,000 volumes and 4,000 MSS., including the Acts of the Council of Basle, built in 1892-1896) is not more than respectable to outer view; while its official residence at the Rheinsprung is both inside and out a mere rabbit-warren—the class-rooms like those of an English Public School 200 years ago.

After an informal conversazione of members on the previous evening (President of Reception Committee, the very able Nationalrath Prof. Paul Speiser), the Society's Governing Body (Präsidium) met in the council-room of the Music Conservatorium, on September 25. The director of this school is, according to Swiss fashion, not a musician, but an expert in another faculty, Dr. Alfred Bertholet, Professor of Theology, a charming and amiable man. Apart from Germany and Switzerland themselves, official national delegates came from Amsterdam (for Holland), Brussels (Belgium), Copenhagen (Denmark), Helsingfors (Finland), London (Great Britain and Ireland), Malmö (Sweden), Paris (France), Rome (Italy), Vienna (Austria), and Washington (United States). Out of nineteen national sections, fifteen were represented at the Governing Body meeting. The first general meeting for reading papers (called Hauptversammlung) followed two hours later in the Conservatorium concert-hall; to this all members were of course admitted, as also the public. There was a goodly show in this hall all through the Congress, varying from 100 to 200. For these Hauptversammlungen were selected the so-considered more important papers (called Referate); especially those commissioned by the management as 'General Current Surveys' of the present-day state of knowledge on this and that branch of musical enquiry. The 'Referate,' fourteen in number, in French and German, are all to be printed. They averaged half-an-hour each, there were no discussions, and it is difficult to report such a mass of literature. Dr. H. Springer summarized music-cataloguing, with suggestions for unanimity. Dr. E. von Hornbostel summarized race-comparison, showing why oriental scales precluded harmony, and advocating the phonograph. Dr. Joh. Wolf (perhaps the most striking lecturer) summarized notational history, with much on rhythmical Mensuralists versus word-accent Traditionalists, the obscure Organ-Tablature, &c. Nearly fifty other papers, called Vorträge, were relegated to the concurrent sittings of nine Subject-Departments, held in the 'rabbit-warren' above-mentioned. There was no proper organization for these, and in brief the audiences are insufficient for such a sub-division.

The Congress ended with a General Business Meeting (Generalversammlung). Here the head of each Subject-Department reported orally what had been most important therein. Also one or two resolutions sent up from departmental meetings were passed. For instance, it was resolved that the 'Quellen Lexikon' of the late Robert Eitner (1852-1905) should be amplified and brought out anew under a committee. Also that mediæval theoretical works, such as those amassed by Martin Gerbert von Hornay (1720-1793) in his 'Scriptores ecclesiastici de musica sacra potissimum' (1784), and by C. E. H. de Coussemaker (1805-1876) in his continuation thereof, should be now collected, duly edited, and printed; the art of compilation combined with critical insight was in its infancy in Gerbert's time.

Space fails to do more than glance at the following. A sacred concert was given in the cathedral; organ by Haas Brothers, 1855-1858, on rood-loft of 1381; all the music 250-300 years old, yet no trace of superannuation; Purcell's five-part anthem 'Remember not, Lord, our offences,' (in German, a capella) was certainly the most beautiful piece; Maria Philippi, contralto, distinguished herself. A secular concert in the Town Concert Room (Musiksaale), for old music, orchestral, chamber, and vocal; quartet spoiled by a persistently out-of-tune soprano, and three English madrigals by Dowland and Morley thus missed their full effect; distinguished themselves Else Rosenmunde (young soprano) and Wanda Landowska (the unrivalled harpsichordist). At the house of Laroche-Burckardt family, a most delightful private evening concert and sumptuous supper; with fair women, spirited men, and the manners of a court, one imagined oneself under Louis Quatorze. By-the-bye, it was clear herefrom that Schubert (1797-1828) had founded his Lied-style on the semi-obscure J. R. Zumsteeg (1766-1802) of Stuttgart. On the last evening, a supper for members and their friends, with valedictory speech-making, at the Stadt-Casino. Coming to earth, the congress-member asked himself the meaning of the six shillings which he had paid; it could scarcely have defrayed his share in the final supper. The answer is that the Congress-week was carried through on a local guarantee-list, and—no names were published! This is the 'unostentatious wealth' above-mentioned. Moral therefrom:—some one observed at the Congress that too much history gives a head-ache; it might also be added that it gives a lean purse; the very agreeable International Musical Congress that has just taken place will not repeat itself in those terms till there is found elsewhere a repetition of the hospitality of Basle.

HOVINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The Hovingham Festival is an absolutely unique phenomenon in the world of music. Its story has been told before now in THE MUSICAL TIMES, so all that need be said to explain how this little village, in one of the most purely rural parts of Yorkshire, is entitled to boast of a festival at which a long series of important works has been given, is that a good many years back, when Canon Pemberton was rector of the adjoining parish of Gilling, he was impressed by the possibilities of a hall, or 'Riding school,' attached to Sir William Worsley's residence at Hovingham, as a concert room, conceived the idea of a festival, and carried it into effect. When he left the neighbourhood there came a break in the continuity of the festivals, which had been held, not annually, but in about two out of every three years, and then the recent death of Mr. John Rutson, who had generously subsidized the institution when it most needed such help, came as an additional blow. However, Sir William Worsley, who has not merely provided the concert-room, but has taken a deep personal interest in the festivals, was determined that they should not come to a premature end. The good-will of Canon Pemberton was assured, and his active assistance was promised, while a most capable and energetic successor as conductor was found in Mr. T. Tertius Noble, the organist of York Minster. So the thirteenth Hovingham festival was engineered, and took place on October 17 and 18 under the general conductorship of Mr. Noble. One of the most striking proofs of the artistic value of these events is the generous manner in which many artists of high repute co-operate for something less than a 'living wage,' their recompense being chiefly the pleasure of taking part in a festival whose sole object is that of making and hearing good music, without any ulterior purpose, charitable or otherwise. The principal vocalists on this occasion were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mrs. Burrell, and the Hon. Norah Dawnay, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. Mr. Kruse was the solo violinist, and brought his quartet party with him; Mr. Withers was the solo violoncellist. The orchestra, over fifty strong, included many well-known names, Mr. J. W. Rendle being the leader, while the amateurs who were privileged to join its ranks were all chosen with a careful regard to their efficiency, which was put to a severe test when one important work had to be given without any full rehearsal, owing to the limited time at disposal.

The choral compositions were Bach's cantata 'Sleepers, wake'; Haydn's 'Spring,' from 'The Seasons'; Dvorák's 'Te Deum'; Elgar's 'The Black Knight,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Kubla Khan,' a thoroughly interesting and representative group of works. 'Kubla Khan,' which was the nearest approach to a novelty, is a characteristic example of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's individual style. He has set the poem to music which, in its richness of colour and wealth of melody is most appropriate, and the romantic picturesqueness of the verses has its equivalent in the score. The contralto solo was very artistically sung by Mrs. Burrell, and the performance was vigorous, if not as varied and subtle in expression as some others during the festival. Generally speaking the chorus-singing was very bright and intelligent, and showed a distinct advance in refinement, while the orchestra was quite excellent.

Beethoven's Violin concerto was played by Mr. Kruse, and Mr. Withers gave a brilliant reading of Saint-Saëns's Violoncello concerto in A minor. Both artists were heard in Brahms's double concerto, which they played admirably, making one regret that opportunities are so rare of hearing a work the austerity of which diminishes as its not too obvious charms are gradually revealed. Canon Pemberton conducted a bright performance of Mozart's so-called 'Jupiter' symphony, and the other orchestral pieces were Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture and Stanford's first Irish rhapsody, of which Mr. Noble gave a remarkably brilliant and interesting reading. Throughout the festival indeed Mr. Noble proved his fitness for the task he had undertaken, and with further experience of what it involves he should go still farther, adding to the vitality of his readings an increased dignity and repose.

The festival opened with an interesting chamber concert, the most important thing in the programme being Stanford's recent Serenade in F for strings and wind, in which Messrs. Claude Hobday (double-bass), Eli Hudson (flute), W. H. Hall (clarinet), Borsdorf (horn) and E. Hall (bassoon) joined the Kruse Quartet, which was also heard in string quartets by Beethoven and Grieg. The serenade has been heard on one occasion in London, but is still unfamiliar. Its melodic charm and beautiful structure should make it a general favourite, and only the difficulty of getting together nine accomplished artists is likely to hinder its frequent performance. At this concert groups of songs by Miss Agnes Nicholls, with Mr. Hamilton Harty at the pianoforte, were a delightful feature of the programme. Among the other vocal solos were Vaughan-Williams's charming 'Songs of travel,' sung with refinement and point by the Hon. Norah Dawnay.

Musical Competition Festivals.

BLACKPOOL.

October 3, 4, 5 and 6.

The continued popularity of this festival may be measured by the fact that this year it was found necessary to allot four instead of the usual three days in order to meet the expansion of the work. Blackpool has exceptional facilities for an event of this kind, and as the promoters and managers are men of the best social standing in the town and have no other motive than the advancement and encouragement of executive skill in music, they have gained the confidence of numerous small musical organizations in the north-west and central districts of England. In their preface the committee stated that the Blackpool Executive is thoroughly decided that the commercial element shall be conspicuous by its absence.

There were over 3,000 competitors during the four days. On the first day 136 persons were tested in solo singing, violin and pianoforte playing, and there was an infants' action-song competition. A concert was given in the evening at which the prize-winners performed, and a cantata, 'Sons of the empire,' partly composed by Mr. Thomas Facer, was staged with remarkable effect, the costumes and actions having been devised with great ingenuity and taste. Mr. Herbert Whittaker conducted.

On the second day adult soloists competed and 60 sopranos, 33 contraltos, 38 tenors and 16 basses were heard. The fact that the following pieces were used as tests shows that the standards held out to competitors were high:

SOPRANOS ..	{ 'O cessate' .. ..	Scarlatti.
	{ 'Secrecy' .. ..	Hugo Wolf.
CONTRALTOS ..	{ 'Slumber song' .. ..	J. S. Bach.
	{ 'Christmas Oratorio' .. ..
	{ 'Divinités du Styx' ('Alceste') .. ..	Gluck.
TENORS ..	{ 'Il mio tesoro' ('Don Giovanni') .. ..	Mozart.
	{ 'Bride of my heart' .. ..	R. Strauss.
BASSES ..	{ 'Qui sdegno' .. ..	Mozart.
	{ 'I'm a roamer' .. ..	Mendelssohn.

Besides the above, vocal quintets were heard in the curious and beautiful part-song 'Comfort in tears' (Cornelius), male-voice quartets in 'My dear mistress' (Spofforth) and 'Wanton gales' (Webbe), mixed-voice quartets in 'To daffodils' (Roger Quilter) and 'The last prayer' (Hugo Wolf), and female-voice choirs in 'The snow' (Elgar) and 'In a year' (Felix Woynsch).

The solo prize-winners were Miss C. F. Gedhill (soprano), Miss Lucy Nuttall (contralto), Mr. Thomas Archer (tenor), Mr. S. A. Moore (bass), and the Blackpool Orpheus Choir, under Mr. Clifford Higgin, gained the first place in the local female-voice choir section.

On the third day children were again in evidence. Many excellent school choirs competed in various sections, and action songs were performed with exceptionally good effect. The animation and interest of this 'children's day' at Blackpool is one of the most remarkable developments of the festival. The fact that the children attract large audiences of parents and friends illustrates the social advantages derived from a festival of this kind. The results are given in detail in this month's School Music Review.

The fourth and 'open' day brought in choirs and bands from a wide area. The Isle of Man, the Potteries district, Nottingham, Manchester, Preston and many other towns were represented. In all twenty-eight choirs, three full orchestras and two string orchestras appeared. Colne full orchestra (Mr. J. T. Wildman) was first in its class, Nelson (Mr. C. Townsley) first in the string section, and the Blackpool Madrigal Ladies first in the chief female-voice choir section. The most important classes were those for male voices (tenor lead), in which the Manchester Orpheus (Mr. Nesbitt) was victorious, and the mixed voice Challenge Shield, in which once again the Blackpool Madrigal Society (Mr. H. Whittaker) was successful. Mr. Lionel Benson declared that Mr. Whittaker's choir gave the finest performance of a madrigal ('The Lady Oriana') he had ever heard. Mr. Looney's splendid choir from the Isle of Man was only slightly behind. They particularly distinguished themselves in Mr. Bantock's part-song 'Awake! awake!' and moved Mr. Edward German to great enthusiasm. As in the solo-singing classes the tests chosen were of the most searching kind. They were as follows:

FEMALE VOICES	{ 'Gentle spring' .. ..	J. Holbrooke.
	{ 'The mermaid' .. ..	Schumann.
MIXED VOICES	{ 'A ballad' .. ..	Theo. Wendt.
	{ 'When love and beauty' .. ..	Sullivan.
MALE VOICES	{ 'What ho!' .. ..	W. Beale.
(ALTO LEAD)	{ 'Nymphs of the forest' .. ..	W. Horsley.
	{ 'Fleeting life' .. ..	Cornelius.
MALE VOICES	{ 'Dance of the gnomes' .. ..	E. A. MacDowell.
(TENOR LEAD)	{ 'Betrothal dance' .. ..	R. Strauss.
	{ 'To Celia' .. ..	C. Lee Williams.
MIXED VOICES	{ 'The Lady Oriana' .. ..	Wilbye.
(CHALLENGE)	{ 'Thou must leave Thy lowly dwelling' .. ..	Berlioz.
SHIELD CLASS)	{ 'Awake! awake!' .. ..	Granville Bantock.
FULL ORCHESTRAS	{ Overture, 'Die Abendceragen' .. ..	Cherubini.
STRING ORCHESTRAS	{ 'Eine kleine nachtmusik' .. ..	Mozart.

The adjudicators were Madame Edith Hands, Mr. William Shakespeare, Mr. C. H. Fogg, Mr. Edward German, Mr. Lionel Benson and Dr. McNaught. The officials, the chief of whom are Mr. Leonard Molloy, M.D., Chairman of the Executive, Councillor J. Collins (Director of Competitions) and Mr. Lionel H. Franceys (Hon. Secretary), worked with great zeal and efficiency. Obviously much experience and prevision were demanded in order to marshal the throngs of competitors, to say nothing of the audiences, which sometimes numbered four thousand persons.

An interesting feature of the festival was the appearance of Miss Clara Butterworth, a young singer who gained a solo-singing prize in the 1903 competition, and as a consequence was sent to the Royal Academy of Music by friends. Miss Butterworth displays a mezzo-soprano voice of beautiful quality and shows promise of a dramatic style. Another young singer, Miss Lucy Nuttall, winner of the contralto solo prize, was one of the discoveries of the festival.

KEIGHLEY.

October 13 and 20.

The fifteenth annual competition held in Keighley in memory of the late Mr. W. H. Summerscales was held on the above dates with the usual success. Vocal and instrumental soloists to the number of 128 and eleven choirs competed on the first day. Miss Emily Barraclough (soprano), of Cullingworth, Mr. Fred Horner (bass), of West Morton, and Mr. Lewis Oddy (pianoforte), of Bradford, were winners in their respective sections.

Eccleshill Baptist Choir (Mr. J. T. Wilcock) gained the mixed-voice choir prize, and the Berry Brow Vocal Union (Mr. R. H. Dyson) that in the male-voice choir section.

Open competitions were held on the second day. There were nine vocal quartet parties and ten choirs from various Lancashire and Yorkshire towns. The Padiham Vocal Union (Mr. Ernest Hitchon) was successful in the mixed choir section, and the Nelson Arion Glee Union (Mr. Lawson Berry) in the male-voice choir section. The tests were:

MIXED VOICES	{ 'Gather ye rosebuds' .. ..	Blumenthal.
	{ 'Evening scene' .. ..	Elgar.
MALE VOICES	{ 'O flame of gold' .. ..	Laurent de Rille.
	{ 'The Wreck of the Hesperus' .. ..	Hills.

Dr. McNaught and Dr. E. C. Bairstow adjudicated in the vocal sections, and Mr. Isidor Cohn in the instrumental. The arrangements worked with commendable smoothness under the experienced direction of Mr. Allan Bradley, the hon. secretary.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Taking the new works in the order of their presentation, the first claiming notice is a prelude entitled 'Sappho' by Mr. Granville Bantock, played for the first time on September 25. This work is the prelude of a series of songs having for their text Mr. H. T. Wharton's English translation of the fragments of Greek poetry which have come down from the famed poetess 'Sappho.' If the prelude, which is in the nature of a symphonic poem, seems a trifle vague, it is well written and richly scored. At the same concert were played for the first time in England two very poetical songs, severally entitled 'Midnight in the forest' and 'Down in the forest,' by Signor Vittorio Ricci, which were admirably sung by Mr. Robert Burnett.

An overture to an historic comedy entitled 'A night at Karlstein,' by Zdenko Fibich, the Bohemian composer, was heard for the first time in England on September 27. The work, if showing little subtlety, is instinct with strong romantic feeling, exuberance and directness of expression.

On October 4 was played for the first time in London a tone-poem entitled 'En Sage,' by Jean Sibelius. No programme is given of the piece, but its musical worth is so great and its significance so pronounced, that, although it manifestly illustrates a series of incidents, ignorance of its specific nature does not hinder enjoyment of the work. The tone-poem opens mysteriously and ends in the same manner, this effect being largely due to skilful scoring. At the beginning the music might well be illustrative of a dark forest or rocky defiles. Anon there seems to come the tramp of men, which grows in force and volume and acquires a barbaric character as though some mighty host of old were passing by, with an exciting effect on the imagination of the listener which testifies to the truth and power of the music.

Another work of Sibelius, produced on October 13, and entitled 'Finlandia,' is said to stir such patriotic feelings in the Finns that its performance was prohibited during recent political disturbances! The themes are so naive and expressive, that they would seem to be folk-tunes, but we have the composer's authority that they are his own invention. The performance of the work at the Queen's Hall aroused such enthusiasm that it was decided to repeat it on the concluding night of the season, October 26. The marked success of the above two compositions can scarcely fail to create a desire to make further acquaintance with the works of Sibelius: their sanity and freshness will cause them to be very welcome.

Four novelties were presented at a singularly interesting concert on October 6. The first of these was a new suite for flute and pianoforte by Mr. York Bowen, by whom and Mr. Albert Fransella it was played. The work consists of three movements, severally headed 'Humoresque,' 'Romance,' and 'Finale,' presto, and is a composition well deserving of cordial recognition from flautists. On the same evening was performed a Concertstück in C minor for pianoforte and orchestra (Op. 2) by Mr. Egon Petri, who played the solo part with great brilliancy. Next came the first performance in England of a 'Gopak' from Moussorgsky's unfinished opera 'The Fair of Sovochinsk,' which proved to be a bright and pleasing example of the popular Russian dance, its effectiveness being greatly due to the scoring of M. Liadoff. Later in the evening the first performance in London was given of Lalo's Violin concerto in G minor on Russian themes. Seeing that this was performed by M. Marsick in Paris in 1881, and that it is singularly charming in character, it is astonishing that it should not have been given in the Metropolis before. The solo part was admirably played by Herr Schwiller, a member of the Queen's Hall Orchestra.

The novelty on October 9 was a 'Music poem' entitled 'Epithalamium,' by Mr. J. H. Foulds, one of the violoncellists of the Hallé Orchestra. The composer has not given the programme of 'Epithalamium,' although its structure corresponds with the stanzas of a poem, unity being obtained by certain recurring phrases. Its instrumentation is picturesque and sonorous, but the form of the work is unsatisfactory by reason of its fragmentary character.

An 'In Memoriam' overture by Mr. George Halford, performed on October 11, is to be regarded as a reverie on a departed friend, some of whose characteristics Mr. Halford has endeavoured to portray in the music. It is understood that several of the themes used in the overture are melodies for which his friend had a predilection, but the two chief subjects would appear to be Mr. Halford's own, and the second of these is a melody of great beauty, tenderly regretful and thoroughly elegiac in character.

On October 16 was given the first performance in England of M. Arensky's 'Variations for strings on a theme by Tchaikovsky' (Op. 35). The melody on which the variations are built is one of the fifteen songs for children by Tchaikovsky, constituting his Op. 54, and composed in 1883. The tune, in the minor mode and permeated by a spirit of melancholy, lends itself to the variation form, and M. Arensky has been content to supply seven variations, of which the most memorable are the third, fourth, and last.

The first performance in London of the Finale from Borodin's unfinished opera-ballet 'Mlada' took place on October 18. The instrumentation of this excerpt is by the composer's compatriot M. Rimsky-Korsakoff, and is picturesque and striking. Signor Ferruccio Busoni is as gifted a composer as a pianist, and a very bright example of his creative abilities was performed for the first time in England on October 20. This was a 'Lustspiel' overture (Op. 38), a work which engages attention by its unflagging vivacity rather than by significance of expression, but its joyousness seems very real, and its optimistic character is calculated to secure it many admirers.

The third work by Sibelius was presented on October 23, a Suite for orchestra entitled 'Karelia' (Op. 11). The first movement of this composition, an overture, was not given on this occasion, a commencement being made with an Intermezzo, the thematic basis of which is a fanfare. This is ingeniously developed into a stirring movement, which provides an effective contrast to the following Ballade. In this the melodies are of folk-song type and suggest the old modes. The Finale is light in character, but extremely gay and vivacious.

The season, one of the most successful of the series, concluded on October 26.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The Grand Opera Syndicate, joining forces with Mr. Frank Rendle and the San Carlo Opera Company, with Mr. Neil Forsyth as manager, may be said to have established on a firm basis the autumn opera season at Covent Garden. This year the house was opened on October 5 and the attendances have justified the engagement of such esteemed artists as Mesdames Melba, Giachetti, Suzanne Adams, Kirkby Lunn and De Cisneros, and Signori Zenatello and Sammarco. A considerable number of new-comers have been heard, the most gifted of whom are Madame Scalar and Signor Franceschini, who made their first appearance here on October 17 in 'Aida,' the former artist in the name part and the latter as Radames, and were at once recognized as operatic vocalists of the first rank. Madame Scalar has a soprano voice of remarkably even and rich quality, and her singing is instinct with intelligence and dramatic intuition. Signor Franceschini's tenor voice is pure in quality and powerful; he is a good actor and has a commanding stage presence. Signor Krismer sang on the opening night as the Duke in 'Rigoletto' and was not heard again; but Signor Carpi, who made his début in the same part on October 11, made a much more favourable impression.

No new operas had been given up to the time of going to press, the repertoire consisting, in addition to those named above, of 'Faust,' 'Carmen' (with Madame Kirkby Lunn in the name part), 'La Bohème,' 'Tosca,' and 'Madama Butterfly'; but Giodarno's 'Fedora,' and Catelani's 'Lorlei' are to be expected. It should be added that Signor Mugnone has conducted all the performances, with the exception of 'Faust,' which was given under the baton of Mr. Percy Pitt with excellent results.

THE REV. H. E. HODSON'S 'GOLDEN LEGEND.'

An interesting performance of this cantata was given in the Town Hall, Cheltenham, on October 11, by the associated choirs of Tewkesbury, Ledbury and Stroud, numbering about 200 voices, together with the efficient orchestra of the Cheltenham Philharmonic Society, the whole being under the able direction of Mr. C. J. Phillips. The cantata, published in 1880, six years before the production of Sullivan's popular setting of Longfellow's poem, contains much effective and original music. The performance was altogether excellent, the combined choirs displaying fine tone, firm attack and good enunciation, while the orchestra gave full effect to the accompaniments, playing also with much spirit the Interlude, March and Pageant music. The solo vocalists were Madame le Mar, Misses Hilda Baker, Jessie King and Margaret Hicks Beach, Messrs. Henry Beaumont, Ernest Davies, T. Woodward and Charles Tree. The reverend composer was called to the platform at the conclusion with genuine enthusiasm, and the performance may be described as 'a very real success.'

London Concerts.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

Miss Una Bourne, an Australian pianist, assisted by Miss Mona McCaughey, a sympathetic soprano vocalist from Melbourne, showed great intelligence in her playing at Bechstein Hall on October 6.

M. Lhévinné, a Russian pianist, had the valuable assistance of the London Symphony Orchestra (conducted by Sir Charles Stanford) for his re-appearance in London at Queen's Hall on October 11. The chief characteristics of this artist's performances are a remarkably sensitive and caressing touch and a refinement of style which, if somewhat lacking in brilliant and energetic passages, make his interpretations engaging and very welcome in these days of storm and stress.

Although prodigies are now too plentiful to be accounted prodigious, except in numbers, record must be made of the first appearance in England, at the Royal Albert Hall Sunday afternoon concert on October 14, of Pepito Arriola, a Spanish boy, born at Ferrol on December 14, 1896. A sturdy little fellow with bright eyes and dark hair, his musical gifts were so pronounced at the age of three that he was examined as a phenomenon at the Psychological Congress then assembled at Paris. Herr Nikisch, while on tour in Spain with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, heard the boy play and persuaded his parents to send him to Leipzig to study, a grant being secured for that purpose from the privy purse of the King of Spain. At the Albert Hall he was heard in Beethoven's third Pianoforte concerto, in which he played with a beauty of touch, sympathetic expression and clearness of phrasing more amazing than his wonderful executive facility. It is satisfactory to note that his parents have no intention of exploiting him as a wonder-child, but an occasional appearance in public is considered advisable to encourage him in his studies.

The two most important pianoforte recitals of the past month were those given respectively by Mr. Mark Hambourg and Signor Busoni, on Saturday afternoon, October 20, the former playing at Queen's Hall and the latter at Bechstein Hall. A remarkable coincidence on this occasion was that both artists included in their programmes Beethoven's great sonata in C minor (Op. III) and, designedly or otherwise, the work was so placed that enthusiastic amateurs were able to hear the interpretation by both artists. Those who did so had an educational experience, for each player is a master of his instrument and has the courage of his opinions.

VIOLIN RECITALS.

Mr. Theodore Spiering gave violin recitals on October 11 and 22, at Æolian Hall, on both occasions proving himself an accomplished player and a good musician, but deficient in the potent attraction of charm. He has, however, a fine technique and a strong sense of rhythm, qualities which account for the reputation which the 'Spiering' Quartet has acquired in Chicago, where Mr. Spiering enjoys considerable reputation.

Señor Sarasate made a welcome re-appearance in London at Bechstein Hall on October 13, when the first of three violin recitals was given with the assistance at the pianoforte of Señor Carlos Sobrino. The most important work on the programme was Schumann's Sonata in A minor, which was delightfully interpreted.

The recital given by Lady Hallé and Mr. Leonard Borwick at Bechstein Hall on October 19 brought back many pleasant memories of countless chamber concerts at which the eminent violinist was wont to appear, and recollections were brightened by her classic repose and the expressiveness of her playing in Schumann's Sonata in A minor, in which she was heard at her best.

VARIOUS CONCERTS.

Madame Clara Butt made her re-appearance in public at her annual concert at the Albert Hall on October 13, when she was assisted by Mr. Kennerley Rumford, Miss Edith Evans, M. Holman and the London Symphony Orchestra conducted by Dr. Cowen. She introduced a new song entitled 'The exile,' by Cecil Engelherdt, and Mr. Rumford sang for the first time a cycle entitled 'Songs of the Norseland,' by Herman Löhr. The latter has a picturesque orchestral accompaniment, but otherwise does not call for comment. The audience was large and enthusiastic.

The London Trio, consisting of Madame Goodwin, Messrs. Simonetti and Whitehouse, commenced its ninth season on October 19 at Æolian Hall. The programmes included Vincent d'Indy's Trio in B flat (Op. 29) and Beethoven's Trio in E flat, which were excellently rendered. Some tasteful singing by Miss Neill-Fraser provided agreeable variety.

Master Lionel Ovenden, the remarkably clever English violinist and pianist, played with noteworthy success at the Crystal Palace on October 13. Another violin recital during the past month worthy of record was that of Miss Gertrude Turner-Schaerer on October 3 at Æolian Hall.

Mr. J. T. Hutchinson gave his annual vocal recital on October 18 at the Steinway Hall, when he was heard to advantage in the Serenade in 'Don Giovanni,' the prologue to 'I Pagliacci' and other well-known songs. A feature in the programme was an effective part-song 'How sweet the moonlight sleeps,' composed by the concert-giver.

A large number of young vocalists have braved criticism in the past month, and with few exceptions have chiefly shown that they require further training; but mention may be made of Miss Isabel Tait, who made skilful use of a sympathetic and flexible soprano voice at her recital at Steinway Hall on October 10.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

THE WORCESTER (MASS.) FESTIVAL.

New York, October 8.

While the triennial festival was in progress last week at Birmingham the Worcester County Musical Association was celebrating its forty-ninth annual festival in the city of Worcester, Mass., one of the most thriving, energetic and beautiful of the Commonwealth's manufacturing centres. It is many years ago that I first told of the doings at these festivals to the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES, and several times I have referred to the fact that they were the outgrowth of the old New England Musical Conventions—gatherings at which the church singers of a considerable territory would study singing under a so-called convention leader, and at the close of the meeting give a concert at which hymns and selections from oratorios would be sung in chorus. After years of acquaintance with the festivals I found myself wondering last week if some of the old people of Worcester with memories reaching back two score years might not contribute an interesting chapter to the story of musical development in America if they were to tell us of the younger generation, whether the old conventions did accomplish more in the promotion of popular musical culture than do the festivals of to-day with their many solo singers, their orchestras and their audiences in festal attire.

To come to the present day, a feature of these festivals, it must be explained here, is that all the rehearsals are public functions for which tickets may be purchased as freely as for the concerts. It cost twice as much to hear Mlle. Parkina, Madame Homer, and Mr. Gogorza rehearse as it did to hear the choir and twice as many other singers practise the uplifting strains of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt' and the emotionally stirring measures of Verdi's 'Requiem.' It also cost considerably more to hear a fine but not extraordinary pianist at an afternoon concert and the fêted trio in the evening than it did to hear the choral and solo forces on the two other evenings; yet it was the last afternoon concert and the final parade with their preparatory meetings that drew and apparently entranced the multitude. Under such circumstances it was less a cause of wonderment that the choir sang the old music perfunctorily at times than that the Association should still deem it worth the while to maintain the choral organization. Why not a soloists' festival, frankly and simply? And why, if the solo performers are to be set down as the real attraction of the affair, should three singers who sang on Friday night only have been thought so much more potent than their ten worthy colleagues who sang on the other occasions? Did Mrs. Rabold, Mrs. Waterhouse, Miss Munson, Mr. Dufault, Mr. Martin and Mr. Daniel make less for artistic righteousness when they sang Handel's music than Miss Parkina, when she sang the thrice-hackneyed mad scene from 'Lucia,' a wishy-washy English ballad and 'Comin' thro' the rye,' to her own accompaniment? Thirteen solo singers were engaged at the festival. Some of them sang once; some in only one composition. This caused the reflection that the Worcester festival seems in danger of developing into a sort of musical fair or market, to which ambitious young singers repair for the sake of getting a hearing (and possibly an engagement) from the conductors and society officers who come to inspect the 'Fall Opening,' and useful words from the newspaper critics.

Let me now complete the record, the choir numbered about 400 voices; the band consisted of sixty members of the Boston Orchestra; principal violin W. Kraft, organist Albert W. Snow, official accompanist Arthur J. Bassett. The choral numbers of the programme were 'Israel in Egypt' (Handel), 'Requiem' (Verdi), 'Song of Destiny' (Brahms), and a choral from Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio.' The orchestral works were: symphonies, Schumann in D minor and Schubert in C sharp; overtures, 'Im Frühling' (Goldmark), 'Euryanthe' (Weber), 'Rienzi' (Wagner), and 'Occasional' (Handel); a set of Symphonic variations by Frederick A. Stock, of Chicago, a new composer; two fragments from a 'Roland Symphony' by E. A. MacDowell; Grieg's incidental music to 'Peer Gynt'; and Elgar's 'Chanson de Matin.' In the way of novelty the offerings were few. The orchestral variations by Mr. Stock asked attention to the work of a rising young German who began his American career as a player in the Chicago Orchestra, rose to be the assistant of the late Theodore Thomas, and became his successor on his death. The theme is plastic and pregnant, the variations full of mastery of harmonic and instrumental devices, and the composition will doubtless soon figure on many dignified programmes. Mr. MacDowell's pieces were obviously chosen because they were written by an American musician upon whom a pathetic interest centres just now, and because their character and dimensions were adapted to a programme's needs. They were composed while Mr. MacDowell lived in Wiesbaden, and published in Germany about sixteen years ago. They are short and inconsequential, and in their original association were designed to delineate the grief and death of Aldabella on learning of the death of Roland and the betrayal of the Paladin to the Saracens by Ganelon.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The thirty-third season of the Philharmonic Society opened with a miscellaneous concert on October 5. The artists engaged were Miss Amy Castles (the Australian soprano), Herr Paul Reimers, Mr. Charles W. Clark and Mlle. and M. Jean du Chastain. A very select programme was performed and enjoyed by a large audience. Perhaps the most noticeable points of the concert were the exquisite singing of Herr Reimers, whose interpretation of German and Norwegian songs was superlatively good; and the pianoforte playing of M. du Chastain, who has a very fine touch and command of technique. The Society's chorus contributed 'By Babylon's wave' (Gounod), 'Weary wind of the west' (Elgar), and the Easter hymn from 'Cavalleria Rusticana,' and their renderings drew general admiration. Later in the season the Philharmonic Society will perform 'Israel in Egypt,' Brahms's 'Requiem' and Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.'

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Birmingham triennial musical festival generally causes a delay in our musical season, which as a rule begins at the end of September or the commencement of October, consequently, apart from the festival there has been very little music in Birmingham during October, the most important event being the Midland Musical Society's performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' to which I will presently refer.

The season practically opened with a pianoforte recital, given in the Masonic Hall on September 9 by Mr. Arthur Cooke, a local performer of pronounced ability and talent who is likely to attain a prominent position in the ranks of our foremost English pianists. The programme, which ranged from Bach and Beethoven to Liszt, included several novelties, the most interesting being a Rhapsody by Julius Harrison, a student of the Midland Institute of Music.

The forecast of the season reveals an exceedingly interesting scheme, the most important features naturally being centred in the doings of the various choral and orchestral societies which have now completed their programmes for the winter. I am glad to be able to state that a prominent place has been assigned to Sir Edward Elgar's new oratorio 'The Kingdom,' produced at the recent festival, inasmuch as the work will be given twice during the season, namely, by the Festival Choral Society under Dr. Sinclair, and by the City Choral Society under Mr. Fred W. Beard. The inclusion of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' in the Festival Choral Society's programme will no doubt prove a welcome revival, as it is nine years since this Society gave Mendelssohn's earliest oratorio. The scheme also includes Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' Beethoven's Mass in D, and Bach's motet 'Sing ye to the Lord.'

Owing to the absence of Mr. Fred W. Beard, who is fulfilling an engagement in Australia, the City Choral Society's first concert of the season will be conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, the work chosen being the 'Messiah.' The second concert will be devoted to excerpts from the works of Wagner, in addition to Coleridge-Taylor's 'The Death of Minnehaha.'

The Midland Musical Society will confine its efforts to standard compositions which strongly appeal to popular audiences, and no more welcome works could therefore have been chosen than 'The Golden Legend' and Coleridge-Taylor's complete 'Hiawatha' trilogy.

Four concerts are again to be given by the Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association, under Mr. Joseph H. Adams's conductorship. Of the principal works included in their scheme I may mention 'Judas Maccabæus,' 'Hymn of Praise,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-feast,' and a concert recital of Balfe's 'Bohemian girl.'

The Birmingham Choral Union will perform for the first time here Sir Hubert Parry's 'The pied piper of Hamelin,' Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' and a concert recital of Gounod's 'Faust': a Wagner concert is also included in the season's programme. The conductor is Mr. Thomas Facer.

Mr. Joseph H. Adams, who is also the conductor of the Sutton Coldfield Choral Society, proposes to give during the season 'Elijah' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin.'

Among the principal concerts organized by local musical entrepreneurs are the four Harrison concerts and the Max Mossel drawing-room concerts, besides large numbers of private ventures. Mr. Percy Harrison, who inaugurates his concerts with Madame Patti, has also secured the services of Messrs. Sarasate, Busoni, Mischa Elman, Paderewski, in addition to a number of well-known vocalists, for the series. The Royal Society of Artists' musical matinées, which began on Saturday, October 6, will be continued weekly until December 8, under Mr. Oscar Pollack's direction as hitherto.

The Midland Musical Society's performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' on October 20 was among the finest achievements yet attained by this well-organized amateur body, so ably trained and conducted by Mr. J. A. Cotton. The choir sang even better and with infinitely more expression and artistic conception than at the performance of the same work last February. The principals—Miss May Eaves, Madame Marguerite Gell, Mr. Joseph Reed, of Cambridge, and Mr. Herbert Parker, of Lichfield Cathedral—rendered admirable service. Mr. C. W. Perkins presided at the organ.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The prospectus of the Orchestral Concert series is now issued, and gives every reason to hope and expect that in all respects the high standard and fine tradition of the past will be maintained. The band will be as heretofore, with Mr. Henri Verbruggen as leader. Dr. Cowen will be conductor-in-chief, and on the occasions of his absence his place will be filled by Dr. Richter, Messrs. Henry J. Wood, Hausegger, Peter Raabe, and Henri Verbruggen. Only one choral concert will be given, at which will be performed Beethoven's 'Choral' symphony and Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens,' when the choral portion will be sung by Mr. Kirkhope's choir.

The Choral Union will take up the study of Bach's B minor Mass. The University Musical Society has in preparation Leo's 'Dixit Dominus,' Mackenzie's 'Procession of the Ark' ('Rose of Sharon'), and Stanford's 'Phauidrig Crohoore.' Mr. Moonie's choir will perform at its first concert 'The Messiah,' and at its second concert Max Bruch's 'Fair Ellen,' Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' and 'Killiecrankie' (J. A. Moonie). For his second concert Mr. Kirkhope announces Mendelssohn's 98th Psalm, 'Noënia' (Brahms), 'Spring's message' (Gade), and 'Ode to the north-east wind' (Cliffe).

Other choral performances are to be as follows: 'St. Paul,' by the Western Choral Society; 'The sun worshippers' (Goring Thomas) and 'The Banner of St. George' (Elgar), by the Northern Choral Society; 'The Erl King's daughter' (Gade) and 'Blest pair of sirens' (Parry), by the Southern Choral Society; and 'Elijah,' by the choir of North Richmond Street United Free Church.

Mr. Robert Burnett's vocal recital on October 10 was, as usual, a great artistic success, to which Mr. George Short contributed in no small degree by his really admirable pianoforte accompaniments.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The programme for the December concert of the Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society (Mr. W. T. Hoeck, conductor) will include Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphony, a Suite for two oboes and strings (Bach—Weingartner), and the Overtures Leonora No. 1 and 'Midsummer night's dream.'

Most of the local choral societies have resumed rehearsals, and the following programmes are announced: Govan Choral Union (now under Dr. D. F. Wilson's baton), 'St. Paul'; Clydebank Choral Union, Mozart's first Mass and Costa's 'Eli'; Coatbridge Choral Union, 'Messiah' and 'Creation'; Vale of Leven Choral Society, 'Judas Maccabæus' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast,' all three choirs being conducted by Mr. W. J. Clapperton; Motherwell Choral Union (Mr. T. Burness, conductor), Cowen's 'Rose Maiden' and 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast'; Saltcoates Choral Union (Mr. Burgoyne, conductor), Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George.'

The Paisley Choral Union, under Mr. James Barr, will only give its annual 'Messiah' concert. Amateur opera will be represented by the Orpheus Club (German's 'Merrie England'); the Amateur Operatic Society (Planquette's 'Rip Van Winkle'); the College of Music opera class (Offenbach's 'Grand Duchess'); and the Athenæum opera class (Mozart's 'Magic Flute' and Bizet's 'Carmen').

The only concert that falls to be recorded is that given on October 9 by Mr. Thorpe Davie, a local tenor vocalist, who on this occasion made his professional début. Mr. Davie sang no fewer than twenty-six songs by composers ranging from Caccini to Maude Valérie White, and his interpretations were well received by a large and friendly audience. The concert-giver was assisted by Miss Margaret Horne (violin) and Mr. A. M. Henderson (pianoforte), who gave, among other numbers, a notable rendering of Brahms's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in A major.

Messrs. Romeike & Curtice, Ltd., the well-known press-cutting agency of Ludgate Circus Buildings, have opened a West-End branch at 448, Strand.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The annual dedication festival was held at Tewkesbury Abbey on Thursday, September 27, when Sir Hubert Parry conducted his own work, 'Voces clamantium,' followed by Parts 1 and 2 of 'The Creation.' The principal vocalists were Madame le Mar, Miss M. Hicks Beach, Mr. A. Webster and Mr. Henry Sunman. The chorus, numbering about 200 voices, was enlisted from the festival choirs of Gloucester, Worcester and Tewkesbury, while the orchestra was under the leadership of Mr. W. H. Reed. Dr. A. Herbert Brewer and Mr. Ivor Atkins were at the organs, and Mr. A. W. V. Vine, organist of Tewkesbury Abbey, conducted the performance of 'The Creation.'

The Gloucester Orpheus Society visited Stroud on October 18, and sang with much acceptance a large number of part-songs at a concert organized annually by Miss Clark in aid of the local hospital. The programme included Stainer's 'Bind my brows,' Wesley's 'I wish to tune,' Parry's 'Love wakes and weeps' and 'Hang fear,' Lee Williams's 'Peace' and 'To Celia,' the conductor's 'There be none of beauty's daughters' and 'Shoot, false love,' and Dr. C. H. Lloyd's 'Give a man a horse' and 'A wet sheet.' Dr. A. Herbert Brewer conducted the fine male-voice choir with his usual skill and success.

On September 26 Miss Grace Burrows, a student at the Leipzig Conservatoire and a native of Cheltenham, made a successful début at the Victoria Rooms, Cheltenham, as a solo violinist.

The Gloucester Choral Society will open its season's work with Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius.'

The Stroud Choral Society has decided to perform Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and 'Elijah' during the season, and the Cirencester Society is rehearsing Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' A choral society has been started at Painswick this season, and will do Stanford's 'Revenge,' and the Gloucestershire Orchestral Society (Dr. A. Herbert Brewer, conductor) has arranged for the following programme: Beethoven's C minor Symphony, Wagner's 'Meistersinger' overture, Dream Pantomime from 'Hänsel und Gretel' (Humperdinck), and 'Scenes for the Ballet' (W. H. Read).

The Cheltenham Philharmonic Society (conductor, Mr. C. J. Phillips) announces two concerts, at which will be performed Wagner's 'Lohengrin,' Stanford's Symphony No. 6 in E flat (the 'Watts' symphony), and 'Songs of the Sea,' conducted by the composer, and Parry's 'Pied piper of Hamelin.'

For the Dursley musical festival the following works will be put in rehearsal: 'Elijah,' 'Hymn of Praise,' and Mr. C. Lee Williams's 'Harvest Song.'

The recent performance at Cheltenham of the Rev. H. E. Hodson's cantata 'The Golden Legend' is noticed on p. 762.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

As is generally the case, local teachers and professors have anticipated the season with interesting performances. Miss Bertha Guthrie, a contralto singer, gave a recital on October 8, when she was assisted by Miss Bessie Blackburn (soprano) and Mr. Arthur Catterall (violin), with Mr. R. J. Forbes at the pianoforte. A selection of vocal duets by Schumann, from the Spanisches Liederspiel, formed a specially interesting feature of the programme. On October 11 Miss Nora Meredith (soprano) gave a vocal recital, Mr. Forbes enriching the concert, as well as relieving the programme, with pianoforte solos. Here again our rapidly growing musical resources were emphasised, in songs composed by Mr. Graham Peel and by Mr. F. Nicholls, the latter of whom accompanied the rendering of his two Tennysonian lyrics, 'Elaine's song,' and 'The splendour falls.' On October 15, Mr. James Richardson gave his sixth annual violoncello recital, with Mr. Forbes at the pianoforte, in the performance of Saint-Saëns's Suite in D minor (Op. 16), of Beethoven's Sonata in G minor (Op. 5, No. 2), and for the first time in Manchester of a Sonata in F sharp minor by the Bologna composer, Giuseppe Martini.

On October 18 the Hallé Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Hans Richter, attracted to the Free Trade Hall an audience of, I suppose, 3,000 musical enthusiasts. The programme contained Richard Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung'; the 'Euryanthe' overture, and Beethoven's seventh Symphony. Mr. Busoni, the solo pianist, gave a titanic exhibition of his brilliant and passionate powers in Liszt's Concerto No. 1 in E flat and played as an encore 'Mazeppa,' the fourth of the Etudes d'execution transcendante. He played also—for the first time at the Hallé concerts—César Franck's 'Prelude, Chorale and Fugue.' I liked the piece. Old forms are dealt with in terms of modern romanticism; but with no irreverent sacrifice of the claims or the interests of universal Art.

The Manchester Vocal Society, under the direction of Dr. Henry Watson, gave the first concert of its fortieth season on October 17. The choir plunged at once into the midst of difficult work with a very satisfactory performance of Spohr's unaccompanied Mass in C minor. The Society had the honour of introducing this work to English audiences in 1878.

Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne on October 13 resumed his weekly series of recitals on the Town Hall organ. His programme included a Prelude and a Fugue (the 'Giant') by Bach; Mendelssohn's fourth Organ sonata; and two movements from an Organ concerto by the elder Wesley. These Saturday evening recitals, lasting about an hour, are wonderfully well attended, and are most enjoyable.

The first of the ten promenade smoking concerts given by members of the Hallé Orchestra, under the conductorship of Mr. S. Speelman, took place on October 20. Such worthy and interesting instrumental works as Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, Massenet's fourth orchestral suite, 'Scènes pittoresques,' the 'Fingal's cave' and 'Marco Spada' overtures, and a suite by Jean Sibelius, inspired by Maeterlinck's drama of 'Pelléas and Mélisande,' and not previously heard in Manchester, figured in the programme. The suite might perhaps be better designated as incidental music. It is certainly original, but at a first hearing it suggests genius labouring a little in giving utterance to thoughts and feelings that stir it. Mr. R. J. Forbes played Emil Sauer's E minor Pianoforte concerto. The vocalists were Miss Gertrude Bloomfield and Mr. Herbert Brown.

The first of the eight concerts of the Gentlemen's Concerts Society—mother of music in Manchester—took place on October 22. The band, as always, was furnished from the Hallé Orchestra, and Dr. Richter conducted. The programme contained 'The Ruins of Athens' overture; three of Dvorák's 'Legends' (Nos. 1, 3, and 5); Saint-Saëns's symphonic poem 'Le rouet d'Omphale'; and a Haydn symphony. Mrs. Henry J. Wood was the vocalist.

One of Mr. A. J. Cross's series of popular Saturday evening concerts—twenty-sixth season—was given on October 20.

A veteran has fallen in the person of Mr. Edmund Nichols, for more than forty years a member of the Hallé Orchestra.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Middlesbrough Musical Union will perform during the coming season Bach's cantata 'The Sages of Sheba,' which is new to the North of England, and Brahms's 'German Requiem.' The Sunderland Philharmonic Society—the activities of which have been temporarily suspended owing to the reconstruction of the only available hall for concerts—will perform Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' and Mendelssohn's 'Elijah,' and the third society conducted by Mr. N. Kilburn, that of Bishop Auckland, is rehearsing Elgar's cantata 'The black knight.'

Jarrow Philharmonic Society is busy with Sullivan's 'Martyr of Antioch,' and the choral society of the neighbouring town, South Shields, will perform Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Elgar's 'King Olaf.'

Two of Mendelssohn's symphonies, the 'Scotch' and the 'Reformation,' and Beethoven's seventh Symphony, Smetana's overture 'Die verkaufte Braut,' in addition to other items, are being rehearsed by the Northumberland Orchestral Society. There will be no lack of chamber music this season in Newcastle. Besides the set of concerts provided by the Chamber Music Society—an old-established institution, applications for membership of which are so numerous that those who wish to join frequently have to wait some years before gaining admission—the Newcastle

Musical Society promise three concerts, at one of which Stanford's Quintet in D will be played, and the Classical Concert Society will give four concerts. The scheme of the last-named Society is interesting: it includes a pianoforte trio concert; a performance of a Bach church cantata for vocal quartet, string quartet and pianoforte; Brahms's 'Liebeslieder waltzes' for vocal quartet and pianoforte duet; an evening with flute and strings; and a violin and pianoforte sonata recital.

The first of the Chamber Music Society's concerts was held on October 18, and was devoted to old-world music. Madame H. Casadesus-Dellerba and MM. H. and M. Casadesus, Casella and Devillers performed on the clavecin, quinton, viole de gambe, viol d'amour, and bass-viol, and Mlle. Baisson sang appropriate songs. Mr. F. Hisking and Mr. E. C. Bainton gave another of their excellent vocal and pianoforte recitals. The latter gave a fine and broad reading of Brahms's 'Variations on a theme by Handel' and contributed two clever songs from his own pen.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

The newly-appointed third conductor of the Royal Opera, Herr Leo Blech, formerly of Prague, began his duties on September 16 by directing a remarkable performance of Bizet's 'Carmen.' This oft-performed hackneyed work had been thoroughly re-studied, and under the inspiring baton of Herr Blech it appeared brighter, fresher and more fascinating than ever.—Two distinguished composers who have not honoured the German capital with their presence for many years will during the coming season make their re-appearance, viz.: M. Camille Saint-Saëns, whose last visit was in 1884, and Herr Edvard Grieg, who has not appeared before a Berlin audience since 1887. The former will be the soloist at the first Nikisch concert, while the Norwegian master will give a concert of his own compositions.

BUDAPEST.

Carl Goldmark has written a new opera on Shakespeare's 'Winter's Tale,' which is shortly to be produced at the Budapest Opera House.

COBURG.

Thirty years after its production Wagner's 'Siegfried' has just been added to the repertoire of the Coburg Court Theatre—surely not to the credit of a German Court theatre. The work was well performed and enthusiastically received.

COLOGNE.

A new opera with the strange title 'Das süsse Gift' (The sweet poison), and composed by Herr Albert Gorter, has just been produced at the Municipal Opera House and very favourably received. The composer had come from Strasburg to conduct the first two representations.

LEIPZIG.

Humperdinck's latest opera, 'Die Heirat wider Willen,' (The marriage under compulsion) has now reached this city, but the first performance did not meet with the decided success which the distinguished composer's friends had hoped for.

MANNHEIM.

At a 'Dutch' concert given by the Netherlands composer Jan Ingenhoven, with the assistance of the Kaim orchestra, the programme included 'Zarathustra's Lied' for bass solo and orchestra, by the conductor; a long vocal scena, 'Vondels Fahrt nach Agrippina,' by Alphons Diepenbrock; an orchestral ballad in five movements, 'Ymnis et Numaine,' by K. Smulders; a 'Javanese Rhapsody' by Dirk Schäfer, and an overture to Rostand's 'Cyrano de Bergerac' by J. Wagenaar.

MILAN.

'Editha,' a new two-act opera by Anton-Francesco Carbonieri, was produced on September 21 at the Lyric Theatre, without, however, meeting with any success. A four-act opera, by Spiro Zamara, entitled 'Mademoiselle de Belle Isle,' produced at the same theatre on September 30, was more successful.

PALLANZA.

A new one-act opera, 'Le perla nera' (The black pearl), by a new composer, Signor Riccardo Boccardi, was produced on September 15, but without much success.

PARIS.

M. Jacques Miranne, of the Marseilles Theatre, has been appointed conductor of the Paris Opéra Comique, in succession to the late M. Lugini.

STUTTGART.

'Aucassin and Nicolette,' a new two-act opera by Max Marschalk, was produced on October 10 at the Court Theatre.

WEIMAR.

A new 'patriotic' opera, 'Before the storm,' by Theobald Rehbaum, was recently produced at the Court Theatre, without, however, achieving more than a succès d'estime.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music. Ada Lewis Scholarships:—Singing: Janet Lydia H. Woolley (Nottingham); Pianoforte: Vivian Langrish (Bristol); Viola: Phyllis Ingram Mitchell (London); Double-bass: Paul James Stanley (London). Erard Centenary Scholarships:—Pianoforte: Norah Mignon Cordwell (London); Harp: Dot Lyons (London). Campbell Clarke Scholarship:—Marie Isabelle Wadia (London). Wessely Exhibition:—Edward Stanelli de Groot (Brighton). Ross Scholarship:—Thomas Gibbs (London). Stainer Exhibition:—Henry Gilleece Dutton (Tewkesbury).

The Girls' School Music Union held one of its useful meetings on October 6. The attractive feature of the gathering was an address by Mr. W. H. Hadow on 'The Principles of Melodic Form.' Mr. Hadow's lively and instructive remarks were followed with keen attention by his large audience. A full report with music-type illustrations is given in the November issue of The School Music Review.

The Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society (conductor, Mr. Allen Gill) announces a performance of Elgar's 'The Kingdom' on November 17, at the Alexandra Palace, to be followed at various dates by Hiawatha (Coleridge-Taylor), The Golden Legend (Sullivan), Dream of Gerontius (Elgar), Messiah, Mass in B minor (Bach), and Faust (Gounod)—an ambitious and comprehensive programme which is sure to be well carried out. The season opened auspiciously on October 6 with a performance of 'Elijah.'

The Central Croydon Choral Society (conductor, Mr. Ronald A. Richards) will give two concerts during the winter months. At the first Coleridge-Taylor's latest cantata, 'Kubla Khan,' some of his choral ballads, and the 'Nero' music entr'acte No. 1 in G will be performed under the composer's direction, in addition to Stanford's 'The Revenge.' A performance of 'Elijah,' in April, will conclude the season's operations.

The Southwark Choral Society—a recently formed organization under the conductorship of Dr. Madeley Richardson, organist of Southwark Cathedral—has commenced rehearsals with Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' The secretary is Mr. Richard Lemaire, 29, Killieser Avenue, Streatham Hill, S.W.

The Hull Harmonic Society (conductor, Mr. Walter Porter) has selected three oratorios for its subscription concerts: 'Elijah,' 'The Messiah' and 'The Apostles'—a commendable blend of the ancient and modern.

The Maidstone Choral Society (conductor, Mr. F. Wilson Parish) will perform Mackenzie's 'The Dream of Jubal' towards the end of the season.

The Tunbridge Wells Vocal Association (conductor, Mr. W. W. Starmer) has selected 'The Dream of Gerontius' for performance during the season just commenced.

Dr. Herbert W. Wareing has been appointed conductor of the Bournville Choral Society, Birmingham.

The Southport Musical Festival is being held at the time of our going to press. A report of this interesting event must therefore be deferred till our December issue.

The conclusion of the review article on the biography of Peter Cornelius is unavoidably held over till December.

The Bloemfontein Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. George H. Deale, gave a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' in the Grand Theatre on September 1. The soloists were Miss van der Hoven, Mrs. MacLagan, Mr. Herbert Matthews and Mr. Arthur Percival. Mr. Percival, who is a former member of Liverpool Cathedral choir, gave a very fine rendering of the music of the Prophet. The choir and orchestra numbered 200 performers, the attack was particularly good and the expression well marked. The oratorio was repeated on Monday, September 3, both performances being attended by His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor.

A very successful performance of the 'Messiah' was given in the Town Hall, Grahamstown, on September 17, under the direction of Mr. W. Deane. Special interest attached to this performance, as the oratorio had not been heard here for many years, and had never before been given on so large a scale. The choir and orchestra numbered nearly 100 performers, the solo vocalists being Mrs. Martin Dower, Miss Clara Robson, Mr. Bernard Streatfield and Mr. Charles Saunders.

Answers to Correspondents.

H. M. G.—(1) If you feel disposed to send the old tune-book for our inspection we will endeavour to trace its history. (2) 'The Easter Hymn' first appeared in a collection entitled 'Lyra Davidica' (1708). We gave the tune in its original form in our issue of April, 1898, p. 237. (3) Bennett and Marshall's 'Cathedral Chants' appeared in 1829. Alfred Bennett, one of the editors, was the eldest son of Thomas Bennett, organist of Chichester Cathedral; but we are unable to say if these musicians were kinsmen of Dr. G. J. Bennett, the present organist of Lincoln Cathedral. (4) We are afraid that the half-dozen compositions forming the four bound volumes of pianoforte music in your possession are not of any great value, either pecuniary or artistic, but they may be interesting as curiosities. (5) The 'Musæ Lyricæ: original melodies composed for four voices' by the Rev. Charles Day have had their day. Of their author or history we know nothing, except that the reverend gentleman was vicar of Rushmere, Co. Suffolk (probably the Rushmere near Ipswich), in June, 1832, the date of the preface to the book, which was reviewed in the Harmonicon of January, 1833. Some local inquiries might elicit full particulars of the Rev. Charles Day's career.

E. P.—By consulting old London Directories at the British Museum we are enabled to give you an approximate date for your old keyboard-instrument, made by William Rolfe & Company, at 112, Cheapside. The firm appears under the designation Wm. Rolfe & Sons in 1815; in 1819 it is given as Wm. Rolfe & Company, and so continues until 1823, when the old style of the firm is reverted to. (There is a gap between the years 1815 and 1819 in the set of London Directories at the British Museum.) In 1826 the London Wall address is added to that of Cheapside. It is impossible for us to estimate the value of the instrument; but its '6 Chippendale legs,' &c., would doubtless enhance its worth even as a piece of furniture.

DELTA.—The 'siege of some fortress' legend, said to be associated with the composition of Chopin's second Ballade for pianoforte (Op. 38), is too legendary to be seriously considered. The work is dedicated to Robert Schumann, who in reviewing it, said: 'I recollect very well, that when Chopin played the "Ballade" here [at Leipzig], it finished in F major; it now closes in A minor. He then said that he had been inspired by some poems of Mickiewicz to write this Ballade.'

C. G. A.—One of the following cantatas may be found suitable for a 'Sunday afternoon choir anniversary service' to be sung by a mixed choir of about forty voices: The story of Bethlehem (West), The last night at Bethany (C. Lee Williams), Olivet to Calvary (Mauder), The Gate of Life (Leoni), The daughter of Jairus, and St. Mary Magdalene (Stainer), and Rebekah (Barnby).

W. J. N.—Play the lower notes of the mordents according to the key in which they occur, a tone or a semitone below the principal note as the case may be.

BUSTON.—Your Harrison & Co.'s edition of Handel's Coronation and Funeral Anthems is of no particular pecuniary value. The date you assign to it, 1730, is much too early, as houses in London streets were not numbered until about forty years later. According to Mr. Frank Kidson's 'British Music Publishers,' your book was published about 1784, or a little later.

S. I.—Over forty pieces by Schubert arranged for the organ are included in Messrs. Novello's catalogue. The 'Quick movements from Beethoven's symphonies' arranged for the organ, are the Allegrettos from the seventh and eighth symphonies (arranged by Best), and the Finale of the C minor symphony (arranged by A. B. Plant).

A. B. S.—To estimate the financial value of your compositions—'2 Songs (one with violin obbligato), 2 Violin solos (both a fair length), two or three Pianoforte solos, and a Valse'—is an undertaking from which we naturally shrink. We are glad to hear that 'all of them are much admired when heard.'

H. P.—The libretto of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus' can be obtained separately from the music of the oratorio; but the librettos of 'Susanna' and 'Alexander Balas' are only printed with the music of those works. Messrs. Novello are the publishers of the above.

H. S. B.—You could not do better than consult the article Greek Music in the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians': it is written by no less an authority on the subject than Professor Macran.

SODD-GRWTHWR.—The wind and percussion instruments required for a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' are: flutes, oboes, clarinets, bassoons, double bassoon, horns, trumpets, trombones (3), and drums.

A. P. P.—The following Christmas cantatas will probably meet your requirements: 'The story of Bethlehem' (West), 'The first Christmas morn' (Leslie), and 'The Cradle of Christ' (Bridge).

HAWKER.—Messrs. Novello will send you, upon application, a list of pianoforte pieces by modern composers that may prove suitable for your pupil.

P. G.—The Hauptmann sacred part-song you seek is most probably 'The night now is falling,' No. 740 of THE MUSICAL TIMES.

L. A. H. & J. M. C.—Please turn to p. 747 for the answer to your questions in regard to Dr. S. S. Wesley's hymn-tune 'Aurelia.'

G. B.—The Sevcik 'Violin Method' is published by Messrs. Bosworth & Co.

OCEAN.—As your question is one that the answering thereof might land us in a sea of difficulty, we must ask you to waive it.

C. C.—Macfarren's cantata 'Christmas' is published by Messrs. Hutchings & Romer.

F. E. P.—We cannot give the names of teachers.

THE PRINCE OF PEACE

A SACRED CANTATA

FOR FOUR SOLO VOICES, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM HOLY SCRIPTURE AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets; viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it proves less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE MUSIC EDITION.

The music of the Council School Hymn Book has been selected for its melodic interest and general suitability to children's voices. These essentials have been kept steadily in view as regards the new tunes composed expressly for the book, wherein many well-established favourites find a place. It will be observed that some of the tunes appear in lower keys than usual in order that young voices may not be unduly strained.

Every care has been taken to make the music of the book acceptable to teachers as well as children, in the hope that daily hymn-singing may become a specially enjoyable feature of school life.

The Hymns (150) chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

EXTRACT FROM “THE EASTBOURNE GAZETTE.”—“MR. MATT has already written a number of works, many of which have been heard on various orchestras, and which, from the taste and judgment evinced in their composition, are well entitled to be termed ‘classic.’ His New March, ‘FAME AND GLORY,’ may certainly come under this heading. Majestic and stately, as befitting its purpose, its theme is so melodiously and artistically worked out that it is a perfect delight to listen to it. We shall be surprised if it is not heard, ere long, on every orchestra in the Kingdom, and in thousands of drawing-rooms.”

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The dominant impression brought away from the town hall by me was that Sir Edward Elgar has given us nothing better adapted to gratify the average taste and judgment than his latest work. . . . Speaking generally and without reference to particular pages, "The Kingdom" is built upon broader lines than its predecessors. The choral sections are more developed, even in some cases as though to the end of musical effect, a point to which more attention should be directed in these days of exaggerated regard for the "word." . . . In the present work I find also enlarged development of the individual utterance. . . . We have more or less extended solos, the most important of which, given to the Mother, fills nine pages of the pianoforte score. Here is a distinct gain to musical interest, another being an appreciation of the value of beauty in music, beauty of melodic phrase, of harmony, and of all that makes for artistic euphony. . . . To sum up this record of first impressions, it is no more than that the new oratorio is in various commanding respects the most acceptable work which Sir Edward Elgar has yet given us.

The grave and glorious works that followed "The Kingdom" were in the picture the foreground of which the Elgar oratorio occupied. Lofty and noble it, lofty and noble they.

STANDARD.

Music of great strength and originality. . . . Sir Edward Elgar has with little short of a stroke of genius made a singable and an interesting libretto out of the Gospel story, and with perfect literary sense of the fitness of things he has only added as an extra number a beautiful translation of the prayer of consecration that is with reason regarded as the original used by the Primitive Church.

Nothing more distinctive as a whole has been done for English oratorio of its kind than both this new libretto and this intensely well-conceived new music of our chief composer. . . . The whole work fulfils briefly its promise, and is frankly more secular and more dramatic, while it is infinitely less contemptible than its predecessor, and is as much itself a section as Siegfried is different from the Valkyrie. . . . To sum up briefly, "The Kingdom" is a live work, a combination of skill and inspiration that marks it as an English oratorio, not only of a new kind, but one that will go abroad and prosper and command respect.

MORNING LEADER.

The Prelude with which "The Kingdom" opens is without doubt among Sir Edward Elgar's noblest inspirations. . . . The first scene opens in an atmosphere of peace and devotion, and an antiphon melody plays an important part. Soon there is a singularly beautiful impressive chord passage, when the assembled believers unite in praise. . . . The scene ends with a chorus, "Is it a small thing?" of great strength and elevation of thought, and beauty of melody and harmony. . . . The delicious charm of the semi-pastoral opening of the next scene is a delightful contrast from which in turn there is a complete transition in the third scene. Sir Edward Elgar rises to great spiritual and dramatic heights in the passages when the Holy Ghost descends, and in Peter's sermon; and the design of the whole is masterly. . . . The Virgin's Soliloquy is not only the most beautiful portion of the work, but certainly the most effective piece of vocal writing Elgar has given us so far.

THE TRIBUNE.

I think that in some important respects the music of "The Kingdom" shows an advance on that of "The Apostles." Effects as great are obtained by simpler means. There is more clearness both in the vocal and orchestral writing, so that in the very complex passages nothing is lost. The music of "The Kingdom" seems to deliver its message more concisely, and, therefore, more directly, while losing nothing of that pervading spirit of devotion which is characteristic of its author. . . . Its music contains greater elements of strength, and it must take a highly honourable place in the long roll of works consecrated to the service of religion. It has living breath and creative power, and thus its existence is justified.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

I believe that in the history of art it will rank definitely with the "Matthew Passion" of Bach. . . . In the interweaving of part with part, in the noble choral writing, and in the "remote beauty" of phrase after phrase, one can at all events think of the two men as standing on supreme heights which, in their own particular altitude, have not been before attained by any musician. . . . The final chorus, which is mostly a setting of the Lord's Prayer, brings to a fitting and triumphant conclusion one of the noblest works of art that I know.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The vast gathering had the pleasure of listening to a work which is worthy to rank with the masterpieces of the greatest of English composers. In several respects it is a stupendous production, the beauties of which it is impossible to fully appreciate at a first hearing. . . . Throughout there is a display of religious sincerity combined with an artistic fervour, which qualities will contribute to the popularity that is in store for the work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The story is presented with a mixture of power and sympathy which few, if any, living composers could approach. The meaning of the text—compiled with great skill by the composer—is always borne in mind, and his power of getting at the heart of a situation is wonderful. . . . It is undoubtedly a great work.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

There are pages in "The Kingdom" which any composer, ancient or modern, might have been proud to sign. From the opening bars of the fine Prelude which introduces the work the hand of a master is apparent throughout. . . . Whether in writing for voice or instruments, alike in the most placid and the most strenuous pages, in the simplest as in the most elaborate, beautiful and striking passages abound. . . . The final scene, introducing the Eucharistic celebration, is treated with great skill and contains some of the most deeply felt and moving music in the whole work, while Sir Edward is to be particularly congratulated upon the restraint and skill with which he has accomplished the difficult task of finding an appropriate setting for the Lord's Prayer.

TRUTH.

"The Kingdom" contains some of the finest music which he has so far given to the world. Elgar shows himself once again in this work possessed of the rare faculty of writing music which, while entirely original and intensely expressive, yet makes an immediate and irresistible appeal. . . . There seems no limit to Elgar's resourcefulness in the production of fascinating figures and tender, poignant harmonies, which are at once beautiful and appealing, and at the same time most subtly and delicately expressive. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that since Wagner no one has shown like genius in this respect.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

In "The Kingdom" I discover an Elgar more serene; more rock-anchored; nearer the final goal of his desires; more rarefied, more ethereal and yet simpler and stronger. There are passages of calm beauty such as he never wrote before. There is a greater technique, with less display of technique; a still greater command of effect by simple means. "The Kingdom" will be the most popular of the three great sacred works bearing Elgar's name.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

It will be seen that Sir Edward Elgar's arrangement of the various scenes is full of dramatic interest, a moving panorama illustrated in sounds of music in a style the composer has made his own, Sir Edward betraying his marked individuality in the wonderful art of his part writing and the independent employment of his themes in orchestra and chorus. The atmosphere that surrounds "The Kingdom" will be found brighter, the score is not so complex, and the parts for the chorus altogether lighter and easier than is the case in "The Apostles."

COMPOSED BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES.

(Op. 20.)

THE TIMES.

It is very interesting, apart from its intrinsic beauty, which is great, to see how closely the classical form has been preserved. . . . The first movement, which is introduced by a bass soloist and choir, in the words, "The glorious majesty of the Lord shall endure for ever," is a very original and finely developed Allegro, which only departs from the usual structural pattern at the close, when a dialogue between a violin and violoncello solo leads into the most charming movement of the work, an Allegretto amabile standing in the place of symphonic Scherzo. Its main melody is exquisitely suave, and a certain sedate graciousness calls up the image of some beautiful character. . . . The three "sayings" of Jesus chosen are such as point most distinctly to the essential part of Christian doctrine, since it is only through acceptance of these that the soul can be placed in the right attitude for the great ascription of praise which concludes the work and gives it its title, "Lift up your hearts." Here all is of the finest quality, from the bass "intonation," as it might be called, set to a plain-song melody from Marbecke, and the splendid chorus "Holy, Holy, Holy," the theme of which is taken from the same source. Technically this number is a set of variations more or less in Chaconne form, but the analogy is not pressed too closely, and with all the resources of his great contrapuntal skill, his strongly individual kind of harmonization, and the beautiful reverence and spirituality which were manifested in "Everyman," the composer reaches something very like sublimity.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The novelty proved to be an attractive composition, with some fine opportunities for the chorus and many exceedingly charming orchestral passages. No applause, of course, was permitted, but the crowded audience listened with the deepest interest to Dr. Davies's beautiful numbers. It is not difficult to predict a great success for this clever work. It opens with the declaration for the bass soloist and chorus that "The glorious majesty of the Lord shall endure for ever." This is followed by a long movement for the orchestra. Next comes a sombre soliloquy for the soloist, the words of which are taken from Ecclesiastes, the singer being supposed to be contemplating rather than sharing the human lot. The Finale consists of a setting of the Sursum Corda and Sanctus, the chorus work being of a plain-song character.

THE TRIBUNE.

The work is earnest, and there is enough in the music to remind us that the composer is a church organist, also enough to show that he is well aware of the changes which have come over the art of music—a spirit of freedom in the matter of harmonic progressions, and especially of form. The first movement, an Allegro energico, in which various themes are exposed and to a certain extent discussed, follows to a large extent ordinary symphonic form. It leads without break to an Allegretto amabile, softness and sweetness being the prevailing features of the movement, which, as a contrast to the preceding one, is decidedly effective. The solo for the bass voice, entitled "Soliloquy," ends with a semi-chorus, while in the Largo espressivo are heard "Three Sayings of Jesus." The final chorus of praise is mostly concerned with the "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts," in which the old plain-song version of the Sanctus is used.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Though the structure of the work may in its broad lines be referred to precedent, there is still ample scope left for individual treatment, and the music abounds in interesting and individual touches, so numerous and often so subtle that a very close acquaintance will be necessary to enable one to discover them all. . . . The first Allegro is founded on themes of great nobility, and here the composer reminds one of Brahms, not only in the general character of his music, but also in his power of welding fine details into a big and harmoniously conceived whole. The Allegretto, again, is charming, thoroughly genial and simple, without a trace of triviality, and combining conflicting rhythms without any suspicion of artificiality. . . . The Sanctus is most happy in conception, and the series of variations to which it gives rise suggests an endless Alleluia, and fit in perfectly with the general design. Altogether the work is original in design and full of interest.

THE TIMES.

Dr. Brewer was represented by "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," sung by Mr. John Coates with such admirable effect that the last had to be repeated. This, a description of a Morris dance, is an enchanting picture of a country merry-making, set to some excellent anonymous words, which are probably old. "An Idyll" and "Amongst the Willows" are also beautiful in a more romantic vein, and the three songs are as good in their way as anything the composer has done. They are sure to become widely popular wherever bright songs with orchestral accompaniment are required.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In these little pieces, composed for tenor voice and orchestra, Dr. Brewer has opened up fresh ground, and shown a pretty talent for imitating the antique. The lyrics, by an old and anonymous author, are quaint and characteristic, while the music happily reflects their spirit and adapts itself to their form. All are charming, but the one most in favour this evening was "The Morris Dance," a very sprightly effusion which, encoored at rehearsal, had to be repeated this evening.

MORNING POST.

Delicate and pleasing vocal pieces, which imparted a welcome lightness to the programme. They were sung by Mr. John Coates. The first, "An Idyll," proved the best in design, though the last won so much approval as to necessitate its repetition.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Mr. John Coates sang three Elizabethan Pastorals by Dr. Brewer, composed for this Festival and conducted by the composer. Dr. Brewer has exactly hit off the sense of sixteenth-century music, and the Idyll which begins the series is exceedingly pretty, and was sung beautifully. Perhaps the best of the three was the "Morris Dance."

THE ATHENÆUM.

The first two of "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," composed by Dr. Herbert Brewer, are dainty, but the third, "The Morris Dance," is specially characteristic, and the accompaniment has been cleverly scored.

THE YORKSHIRE POST.

Dr. Brewer contributed a set of "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," entitled respectively "An Idyll," "Amongst the Willows," and "The Morris Dance." The quaint words, culled from a collection of Elizabethan lyrics, have suggested music whose lightness and fancy happily reflect their character. All three have genuine charm, but the daintiness of the quaint "Morris Dance," if not matchless, could not easily be matched for its daintiness and quaint humour, which, admirably interpreted by Mr. John Coates, so exhilarated the audience that a repetition was inevitable.

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"Three Elizabethan Pastorals," from the pen of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, were sung by Mr. John Coates. They are also well-written pieces. The last of the three, a Morris Dance, is very effective. Mr. Brewer evidently knows how to write for the orchestra.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A trio of dainty Elizabethan Pastorals by Dr. Herbert Brewer is clever and charming. The first, entitled "An Idyll," has a quiet lyrical grace. The last, "The Morris Dance," is riotously spirited, and was encoored.

HEREFORD TIMES.

"Three Elizabethan Pastorals," written for the Festival by Dr. Herbert Brewer, proved very attractive, and were much appreciated. They are light in character, but quite charming in their picturesque and dainty treatment. "The Morris Dance" is the most striking of the three, as there is real fibre and character in it, the quaint dance being charmingly treated both vocally and instrumentally.

GLOUCESTER JOURNAL.

Mr. Brewer made a distinct hit with his three songs. They are bright, tuneful, and at the same time scholarly. . . . Of the three songs "The Morris Dance" aroused the greatest enthusiasm on the part of the audience, though that might well have been because admiration had been pent up till the trio was completed.

"OLD SALTS!"

"'OLD SALTS!'—To bass and baritone vocalists 'Old Salts!' should prove a boon, for it is a fine, bold work, and one which would find ready acceptance in the drawing-room or in the concert hall."—Boston Independent.

"'OLD SALTS!' is a fine, rattling ditty for bass or baritone, and has a ring and swing about it which should make it heartily welcome to vocalists in search of an exhilarating ballad redolent of the sea."—Wilts and Gloucester Standard.

"'OLD SALTS!' is a singularly fine specimen of the popular sea-song, and promises to take its place among the best ditties of that class. The melody is striking and catchy, and the song should supply a want among bass and baritone singers."—Bath Herald.

"'OLD SALTS!'—A sea-song for bass or baritone. It is a spirited, rollicking, breezy song, with a good swinging chorus—the very thing for a merry company of Jack Tars."—Peterborough Standard.

"LIFE'S GARDEN!" AND "LOVE'S RETURN!"

"... being fraught with a passionate tenderness which strongly appeals to the admirer of love-songs. Their treatment discloses the touch of an accomplished musician, for the themes necessitated very delicate handling."—Boston Independent.

"Of a tender and passionate nature, and full of sweetness withal."—Wilts and Gloucester Standard.

"Two short songs, under one cover, show the composer in a different mood. They are sweet and attractive miniatures and musicianly to the backbone."—Bath Herald.

"'LIFE'S GARDEN!' and 'LOVE'S RETURN!' strike a sentimental, elegiac note. They begin plaintively and softly, and gradually work up to a happy outburst of melody. 'Life's Garden!' is one of the shortest songs imaginable, and the skill with which the composer has invested it with a distinct unity and style of its own, compels admiration. 'Love's Return!' is longer. It contains some beautiful passages, and the composer has evidently bestowed great pains on its composition, which is elaborate and fanciful to a degree."—Peterborough Standard.

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs. J. W.

THE TIMES.

The instrumental introduction is most impressive, and finely scored; the fine chorus into which it leads, "Who can number the sands of the sea?" is but the first of a series of noble choral numbers such as the composer knows so well how to write. The passage "The word of the Lord most high" is worked to a fine fugal climax. After the first bass solo, another exceedingly beautiful chorus, "We look for light," carries us to the soprano solo, "Why are ye so fearful?" in the course of which several of the Beatitudes are uttered by the single voice and commented on by the chorus. This is grateful to the singer and of lovely effect. The next section is an almost dramatic version of Ezekiel's vision of the valley of dry bones, and this again is worked up to a vigorous climax with great imaginative skill. The beautiful soprano solo, "The people that walked in darkness," leads to the final chorus, "See now ye that love the light," set to words that we may guess to be the composer's own, so manly is their swing and so fine their feeling.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Sir Hubert Parry, apart from a somewhat lengthy orchestral introduction, proceeds in the fashion of modern oratorio, modifying it, however, by giving the orchestra more than usual prominence and significance. . . . After a slow and serious introduction, the chorus utters a number of aphorisms concerning wisdom in the manner, if not in the language, of Ecclesiasticus. Following this, the bass soloist carries the discourse further, enlarging upon the vanity of riches and the fate of the fool. The chorus answer that "they who look for light see only darkness. We grope for the wall like the blind; yea, we grope as those who have no eyes." At this point the voice, soprano, of a Spirit is heard proclaiming the blessedness of the poor, since theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven. The chorus recognise the Spirit that quickens, and the solo utters some of the Beatitudes, each of which evokes an appropriate comment from the people, who finally decide "It is the Spirit that beareth witness, because the Spirit is truth." The bass soloist, now impersonating the Prophet of the valley of dry bones and having the help of the chorus, illustrates the change from darkness and death to light and life by telling once more his marvellous tale, after which he repeats the Divine promise of renewed life for Israel. The rest is joy and thanksgiving, expressed by a soprano solo and final chorus. The high purport of this "book" cannot be denied, nor can one refuse to see in the work a sermon which, enforced by the power of music, may bring comfort to the poor and those who are cast down.

MORNING POST.

The music made a profound impression. The score contains evidence of all the sound musicianship associated with the name of the composer, and many sections are of marked originality and individuality. Sir Hubert Parry occasionally speaks in terms somewhat foreign to his past utterances, but they serve to accentuate the ability shown in the Sinfonia, a work which by its form and execution is calculated not only to sustain the composer's reputation, but to augment it. The form is unconventional and thoroughly modern, but in its execution the composer has never departed from either his customary melodiousness or grace, and the work offers a striking example of the possibility of writing modern music that is neither ugly nor involved. There is much tender expressiveness in the musical setting of the three Beatitudes, all of which close in the same beautiful manner with the entry of the chorus. These sections without doubt form some of the best music Sir Hubert Parry has yet written. . . . The choruses contain many effective passages, and among them may be mentioned the striking unison at the words "Son of Man" and the beautiful music associated with "Prophesy unto the wind."

DAILY NEWS.

The score may be said to scintillate with scholarly musical figures, whose chief beauties are to be found in their utter dissimilarity to any compositions except those of Sir Hubert Parry. The popular baronet, in a word, represents only himself where the art of musical expression is concerned, and more than this surely need not be said.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Sir Hubert Parry's sacred symphony, "The Soul's Ransom," which has been specially composed for this festival, was heard in the afternoon under his personal supervision, and it created a most favourable impression. The director of the Royal College of Music has written his own text, which, by the way, has as its motto, "If thou desire wisdom, keep the Commandments," and the majority of his lines are based on Biblical passages exhorting the Christian to have courage in himself and confidence in his creed. Probably what will insure lasting popularity for this masterly work are the choruses, all of which are of a vigorous, inspiring character. They are extremely effective, and contain plenty of broad, flowing melodies calculated to please the ears of the earnest musician.

THE TRIBUNE.

In the introductory instrumental movement are set forth the themes on which much of the music is built, and either from the character of the melody or some rhythmic feature they are easy to retain in the memory. . . . The most notable part of the work is the section dealing with the graphic description in Ezekiel of the valley of dry bones into which was breathed the Spirit of the Lord. Such a subject would tempt many a modern composer to write music of a highly sensational character; but Sir Hubert Parry, while catching the spirit of the words, refrains from making them an excuse for a mere musical display. . . . A second soprano solo leads to the final chorus, "See now ye that love the light," admirably worked up to an effective climax. The choir evidently enjoyed the grateful music provided, and sang with great success.

GLOBE.

"The Soul's Ransom," described by Sir Hubert Parry, its composer, as a "Sinfonia Sacra," and "A Psalm of the Poor," is laid out for soprano and baritone solos, chorus, and orchestra, the composer having compiled his libretto from Scriptural sources. "The Soul's Ransom" marks no departure from the composer's well-known penchant for didactic and reflective writing, much of which is grateful in character.

THE ATHENÆUM.

The style of the music throughout is dignified, and the composer expresses his thoughts and feelings in very direct manner. As in "The Love which casteth out Fear," which he wrote for the Worcester Festival, Sir Hubert's chief aim seems to be not to display his learning and skill, but rather, in the fewest possible notes, to intensify the solemn words. There is latent power in his music—a power which as the work becomes familiar will make itself more strongly felt.

THE YORKSHIRE POST.

Like most of his choral works of like dimensions, it is rather a poem the symmetrical and logical form of which has been allowed to suggest an equally symmetrical musical clothing. Recognised musical devices, fugals and the like, are employed, but less for their own sake than as an aid to the adequate interpretation of the poetic ideas underlying the work. . . . Sir Hubert Parry has, I think, had a greater eye to orchestral richness than usual. The colour-scheme is certainly more varied and less conventional than it has often been of late, and many of the orchestral passages have a charm of their own quite apart from questions thematic or constructive. A very striking instance is where the Prophet tells of the shaking of the dry bones, the atmosphere of strangeness and mystery being happily conveyed, and without any straining after effect. The introduction, too, is in the composer's best style. It is solemn and intensely impressive. . . . The choruses are as virile and vigorous as ever, and they were well sung, while the orchestra was heard to particular advantage, all the details of the score being beautifully brought out.

THE CANTICLES

POINTED FOR CHANTING.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PREFACE.

The "One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version)" forming this Psalter have been selected and pointed for singing in churches where the Prayer Book version is not used.

It has been well said that "good chanting should just be good declamation joined to a musical intonation. Only on this principle can be obtained that elasticity which is essential to emotional expression." Therefore, all rhythmical subdivisions of bars can only be approximate, and mechanical rigidity must give place to a natural rendering of these incomparable poems of Holy Writ.

The typographical arrangements should tend to facilitate and promote intelligent chanting. Not only is the beauty of the Hebrew parallels brought out by the disposition of the words in poetic lines, but the singer is greatly assisted towards the attainment of what should be his earnest endeavour, a devotional rendering of the Psalms.

Special care has been taken in selecting only singable chants, those that possess melodic interest and are free from harmonic complications. With a few exceptions, the reciting notes are not above C (third space in treble clef), and some of the chants have been transposed down from their original keys. While the selection includes the best known and well-tested chants, new ones have been specially contributed to this Psalter by Messrs. Josiah Booth, Alfred Hollins, J. H. Maunder, and John E. West.

PRESS NOTICES.

THE DUNDEE ADVERTISER (August 6, 1906).

There is one branch of psalmody, however, which has been much neglected in all the Scottish Churches—that of chanting. Indeed, it seems that the art of chanting was lost by the Protestants at the Reformation, and is only now beginning to show signs of revival. This resuscitation would be accelerated if conductors of Scottish psalmody could be induced to use an excellent little book published by Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., London, entitled "One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version) and the Canticles, pointed for Chanting." The editor, Mr. F. G. Edwards, has had much practical experience, and gives some valuable hints as to the best methods to be adopted in chanting; and has made an excellent selection of ancient and modern chants.

THE ABERDEEN FREE PRESS (July 23, 1905).

The Psalms most generally in use have been selected, and following these are the Canticles—all pointed and assigned to appropriate chants. The editor, bearing in mind the maxim that "good chanting should be good declamation joined to a musical intonation," has adopted a system of pointing that is at once simple and natural. The chants are admirably selected for the purpose intended. They mostly all possess melodic interest, and are free from harmonic complications, while their compass, and in particular the reciting notes, has been arranged to suit medium voices. The book makes congregational singing not only possible but simple.

CHRISTIAN WORLD (September 13, 1906).

"One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version)" is the title of a work just issued by Messrs. Novello, which has been edited by Mr. F. G. Edwards. Evidently the publishers think that there is a future for chanting in the Free Churches. The editor's directions in the preface concerning the troublesome reciting tone are admirable. It is to be hoped that they will be heeded. The Anglican chant is a compromise between unmeasured music, and it is full of traps. Hurry, gabble, and false accents are common. Where is really perfect chanting to be heard? The chants are well chosen from sources old and new, and in deciding what psalms to include the editor has had the help of Dr. Monro Gibson. The type of the words is delightfully large and clear.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS (July 30, 1906).

The aim has been to select such chants as are singable, and with some old favourites are combined new ones by Messrs. Josiah Booth, Alfred Hollins, J. H. Maunder, and John E. West. The book is certain to be appreciated, and the carefulness manifested by Mr. Edwards in his other contributions is also shown in this effort.

MUSICAL JOURNAL (September, 1906).

The pointing has been carefully done; it is simple and helpful to congregational singing.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers' Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's graceful craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

TO MUSIC MASTERS
AND TEACHERS OF THE VIOLIN.

MESSRS. W. E. HILL & SONS beg to draw attention to their

MODERN VIOLINS and VIOLONCELLOS suitable for the use of beginners and young players.

These instruments are fitted up with as much care as would be taken in fitting up a fine Italian instrument, and they are therefore of far more assistance to the player than the modern instruments usually sold. Too much attention cannot be paid to details of this kind in Violins and Violoncellos intended for the use of beginners; for, if the tone of his Violin is harsh and difficult to produce, the student is liable to become discouraged and to lose interest in his study.

PRICES FROM £1 IS. TO £5.

"Dear Mr. BORWELL,

"It is with very great pleasure that I write to ask if you can sing for us at one of our concerts this winter. We also want to know if Mrs. Borwell would sing on the same occasion, and what would be the fee for both?"

"Your singing gave such pleasure last year, that at our committee meeting yesterday there was a unanimous wish to have you again."

"THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS" (ABERDEEN).—"Mr. . . . . . was engaged for the part of the Priest and the Angel of the Agony, but through indisposition was unable to appear. A substitute in every way efficient was, however, found in Mr. Montague Borwell, from Westminster Abbey. Mr. Borwell is a manly baritone, with a big, resonant, and beautifully distinct voice. His method is admirable. In breathing and working up crescendos he excels, and really proved the right man in the right place for the music assigned to the two parts named. The 'Profiscere,' along with the chorus, and the 'Jesu' appeal were both magnificently delivered."—Aberdeen Evening Express, Nov. 10, 1906.

EXAMINATION QUESTIONS AND HOW TO WORK THEM

BY

CUTHBERT HARRIS,

Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.

PREFACE.

This Primer is intended more especially for those who purpo presenting themselves for examination in the theory of musi While the subjects dealt with may be found in all examination schemes for musical degrees and diplomas, it is hoped that the following chapters may prove useful more especially to candidates for the diplomas of the Royal College of Organists.

The object of this book is to stimulate and cultivate method in answering examination questions. Considerable experience as an examination "coach" has proved the success of the method, herein followed, of dissecting the questions, and—by dividing the points for consideration under several heads—thus directing the student's attention to one point at a time.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Editorial and Advertisement Offices of 'The Musical Times' have been removed from 1, Berners Street to 160, Wardour Street, Soho, W.

SOHO AND THE HOUSE OF NOVELLO.

Wardour Street is famous for book-stalls and curiosity shops. Charles Lamb was fond of this street; and Hazlitt lies on the other side of the wall which encloses the burial-ground of St. Ann's. I have heard Lamb expatiate on the pleasure of strolling up 'Wardour Street on a summer's day.'—Leigh Hunt.

Rummaging over the contents of an old stall at a half book, half old-iron shop, in an alley leading from Wardour Street to Soho Square, yesterday, I lit upon a ragged duodecimo, which had been the strange delight of my infancy. . . . The price demanded was sixpence, which the owner (a little squab duodecimo of a character himself) enforced with the assurance that his 'own mother should not have it for a farthing less.'—Charles Lamb.

No part of old London is richer in literary and artistic associations than Soho. The district consisted of fields up to the latter part of the seventeenth century, when building operations proceeded apace. This transformation took place in sheer defiance of a Royal Proclamation of the year 1671, which prohibited the further erection of houses in the fields of 'So-Hoe,' as 'they [the houses] choak up the air of His Majesty's palaces and parks, and endanger total loss of the waters which, by expensive conduits, are conveyed from these fields to His Majesty's Palace at Whitehall.' One cannot help sympathising with King Charles II. at the prospect of being thus deprived of such necessities of life as air and water. What would the Merry Monarch say to the London of our day? The houses on the south side of Soho Square were finished in 1671; about 1680 Frith Street, named after Fryth, a builder, came into existence; Dean Street followed in 1681; and in 1686 Wardour Street, named after Henry, third Lord Arundel of Wardour, was added to the rapidly-growing West End of Greater London.

SOME FAMOUS SOHOISTS.

The neighbourhood became aristocratic to a degree—Ambassadors, Dukes, Bishops, and other great folk making choice of it for their town mansions and residences. But we must pass over these mighty people and record the names of some former inhabitants who added lustre to the literary and artistic associations of Soho. John Dryden and Edmund Burke lived in Gerrard Street, in which thoroughfare Boswell and Gibbon lodged, and Sheridan the elder delivered his lectures on elocution and declamation. At the 'Turk's Head' tavern, also in Gerrard Street, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Dr. Samuel Johnson, Edmund Burke, Oliver Goldsmith, David Garrick and Sir John Hawkins were wont to foregather as members of The Club, or, as it was called at Garrick's funeral, The Literary Club. Sir Joshua lived in Great Newport Street and Leicester Square, Sir Thomas Lawrence in Greek Street, and Sir James Thornhill, famous for his decorations of St. Paul's Cathedral, resided in Dean Street, whence the painter's daughter eloped with William Hogarth. It is said that when Queen Anne visited Sir James Thornhill's studio to sit for her portrait, her chairmen used to adjourn to a tavern opposite, which is now replaced by a modern public-house called 'The Crown and Two Chairmen.' William Hazlitt and Edmund Kean were inhabitants of Frith Street, at one time called Thrift Street. In Soho Square lived Sir Joseph Banks, P.R.S., Charles Kemble, and Sir Charles Bell, the eminent surgeon and the great authority on the hand.

SOHO SQUARE IN 1820.

(From an old print kindly lent by the Rev. J. H. Cardwell, M.A., Rector of St. Anne's, Soho.)

Wardour Street could claim a distinguished householder in James Flaxman, the sculptor, who, poor man, had to augment his scanty income by becoming parish officer and collecting the watch rates, going from house to house with an ink-horn at his button-hole. In regard to this street Strype, in his edition of Stow's 'A Survey of the Cities of London and Westminster' (1720), says, under the heading St. Ann's parish :

Wardour Street hath only the east side in this parish, the west being in the parish of St. James's, which runs from Compton-street up to Tyburn Road. In the middle part the buildings are good, but towards the Road, very ordinary and ill-inhabited ; but on the other side the buildings are better.

The facsimile (on the opposite page) of Strype's map of 1720 (or earlier) shows that Tyburn Road is now Oxford Street, and that Berners Street, now running in a line northwards from Wardour Street, had no existence—fields mark the spot of this busy thoroughfare. It will also be observed that two hundred years ago Soho Square was called King's Square.

THE HUGUENOTS.

Not the least interesting feature in the history of Soho is its connection with the settlement of the Huguenots in England. When the Edict of Nantes was revoked in 1685—the year in which Bach and Handel were born—many of the refugees settled in Soho and St. Giles, where they pursued the art of making crystal glass, and carried on the manufacture of silk and jewellery, then little understood in England. This influx of the Huguenots caused the district to become more or less a foreign quarter of the town, a characteristic which has remained to this day. In Little Chapel Street formerly stood a Huguenot chapel, the outcome of Letters Patent granted by King James II. in 1688. This chapel, called The Patent, was built in 1694, and towards its erection the sum of £300 was said to be given by Lady Hollis, but believed to have come from the purse of Queen Mary II. That the well-springs of charity formerly flowed freely in Soho—as, indeed, they do now—may be judged from the following advertisement in The Public Advertiser of November 23, 1768 :

Sunday next the two LAST ANNUAL Charity-Sermons will be preached in the French Chapel, called THE PATENT, in Chapel-street, near Soho-square ; the Produce of which is to give Coals in this cold and dear Season to several poor French Protestant Refugees. By the Last Year's List it appears that 167 Families were assisted by this useful and necessary Commodity by the said Charity.

Donations will be thankfully received at the Chapel Doors, or in the Vestry. This public method is taken, in hopes of continuing this charitable Distribution, and to excite the Benevolence of those who do not want much Argument to be moved to so good an Act.

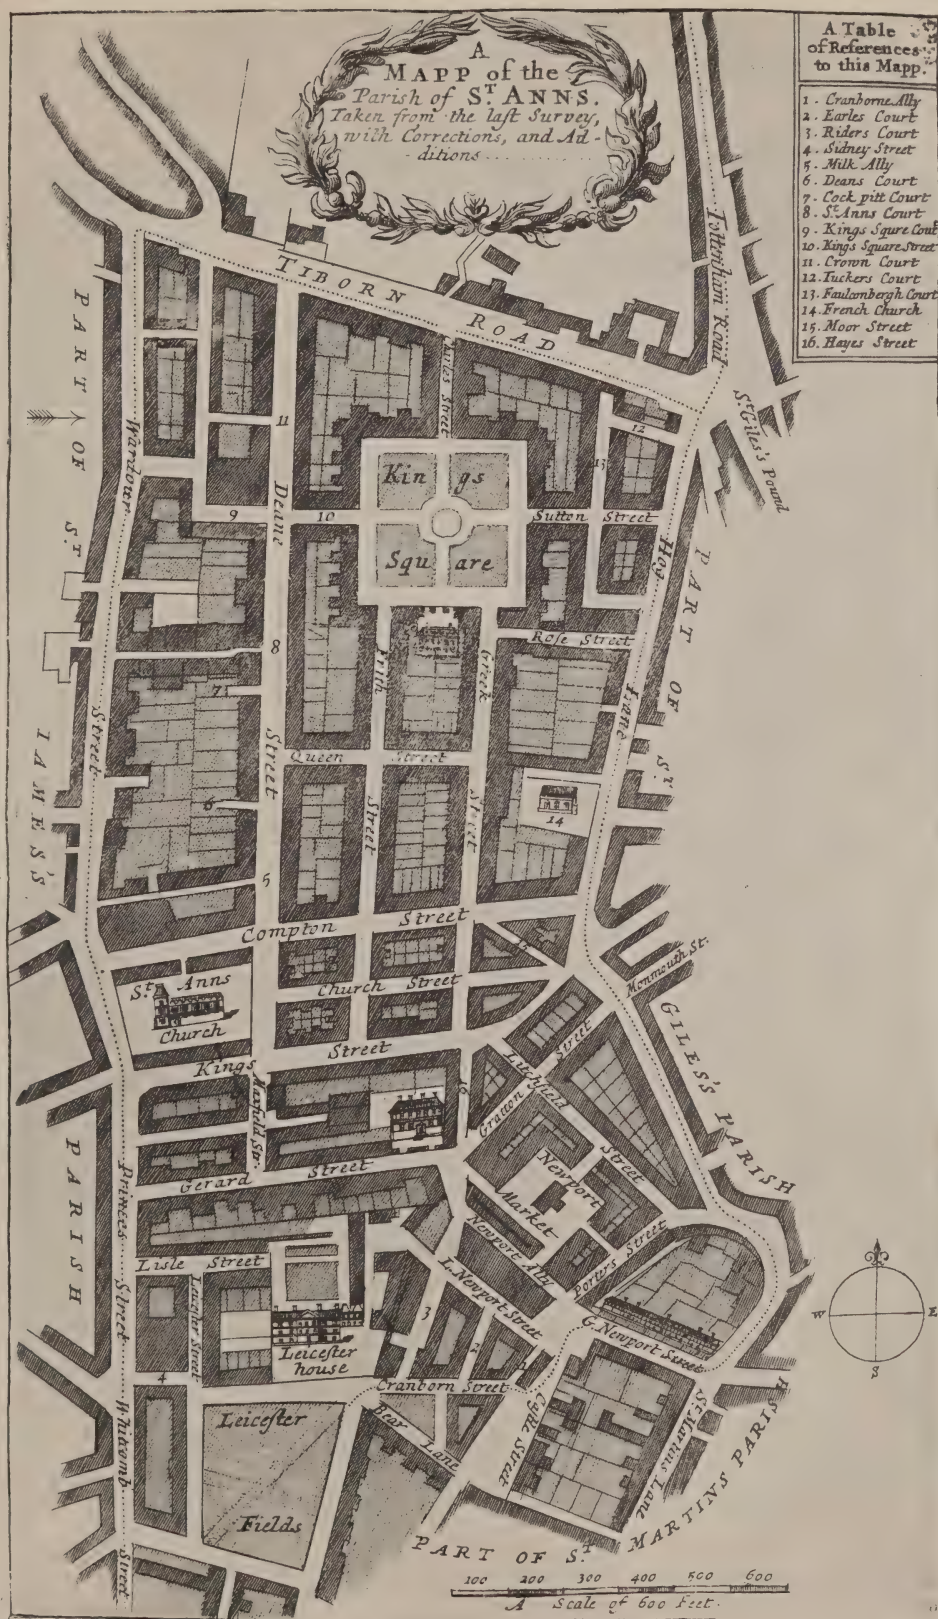

In this connection Strype may again be quoted in his reference to Chapels in these parts [Soho], for the use of the French nation ; where our Liturgy, turned into French, is used, French ministers, that are refugees, episcopally ordained, officiating : several whereof are hereabouts seen walking in the canonical habit of the English clergy. Abundance of French People, many whereof are voluntary exiles for their religion, live in these streets and lanes, following honest trades ; and some gentry of the same nation.

The Patent Chapel, referred to above, occupied a site now covered by a portion of Messrs. Novello's printing and bookbinding works on the Little Chapel Street side of the premises.

GREAT COMPOSERS IN SOHO.

Are not some of the greatest musicians personally associated with Soho? Handel no doubt visited his pupil, amanuensis and secretary, Mr. Christopher Smith, at Meard's Court, Dean Street, whence he (Smith) issued his 'Suites de Pièces pour le Clavecin,' to which Handel was a subscriber. Gluck, too, must have been familiar with the neighbourhood when—in 1746, at Hickford's Great Room in Brewer Street—he played 'a Concerto upon Twenty-six Drinking-Glasses, tuned with Spring-water, accompanied with the whole Band, being a new Instrument of his own Invention.' And did not Mozart, as a little boy, and his gifted sister, Nannerl, give their recitals (to use a modern term) in Frith Street? The two children and their father lodged at Mr. Williamson's, a Wax and Sperma Coeti-chandler in Frith Street, now No. 21, but rebuilt; next door but one, going north, was the house in which the celebrated lawyer Sir Samuel Romilly, the son of a jeweller, was born. Haydn, during his sojourn in Great Pulteney Street, must have been familiar with a district in which Dr. Arne lodged, and Mrs. Billington and Madame Vestris were born. J. F. Lampe, J. C. Bach and his colleague Abel were inhabitants; and it should not be forgotten that the parish church of Soho has given the name 'St. Ann's' to the well-known psalm-tune assigned with good reason to Dr. Croft, a former organist of that interesting old church. Coming to more recent times, during his first visit to England in 1839, Richard Wagner stayed at the 'King's Head' in Old Compton Street, since rebuilt, where he not only suffered a martyrdom from the organ-grinders but lost his big dog. Of Mendelssohn and his friendship with the Novellos more anon.

SOHO AND ITS MUSIC-PUBLISHERS.

One of the earliest of these was Peter Welcker, in Gerrard Street, who published Clementi's 'Opera Primo' (as the title-page has it)—his 'Six Sonatas for the Harpsichord,' dedicated to his patron, Mr. Peter Beckford, M.P., nephew of Alderman Beckford, and cousin of the author of 'Vathek.' Domenico Corri, and his son-in-law, Johann Ludwig Dussek, the composer, were in partnership as music publishers in Dean Street. From the house of Goulding & D'Almaine in Soho Square 'Home, sweet home' was first issued as a 'Sicilian Melody,' although composed by Sir Henry Bishop! Messrs. Wessel & Stapleton, in Frith Street, were the earliest English publishers of Chopin's works; and Messrs. Coventry & Hollier, in Dean Street, issued the original English edition of Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas, and Sterndale Bennett's first set of Six Songs (Op. 23), then published at ten shillings!

MENDELSSOHN'S 'SONGS WITHOUT WORDS.'

Another important first edition is not only associated with Soho, but marked the beginning of pleasant business relations between Mendelssohn and the house of Novello. Seventy-four years ago—the exact date is August 20, 1832—was issued from the little parlour-shop in Frith Street the first instalment of Mendelssohn's 'Songs without words,' with the following title:

ORIGINAL MELODIES,

FOR THE Piano Forte, COMPOSED
BY

FELIX MENDELSSOHN BARTHOLDY.

Ent. Sta. Hall.

LONDON.

T. (sic) A. NOVELLO, 67, Frith Str., Soho Sq.
Bonn, by N. Simrock.—Paris, by M. Schlesinger.
I. M. for M. B.

The 'I. M. for M. B.' signifies that Ignaz Moscheles signed every copy for 'royalty' purposes on behalf of his young friend Mendelssohn. It is evident that neither Vincent Novello nor his youthful son, the publisher, would run the risk of purchasing such an unknown quantity as Mendelssohn's 'Songs without words'! In a letter to Moscheles, Mendelssohn makes the following amusing reference to this Novello publication. He says: 'The work will certainly go through at least twenty editions, and with the proceeds I shall buy the house No. 2, Chester Place [Regent's Park—Moscheles lived at No. 3], and a seat in the House of Commons, and become a Radical by profession. Between this and that, however, I hope we shall meet, for possibly a single edition may prove sufficient.'

Mendelssohn was not very far wrong. During his visit to London in the year following the publication of his 'Original Melodies,' he wrote to Moscheles in the following witty strain:

London, in my Club, May 16, 1833.

This morning I forgot to mention, my dear Moscheles, what I have often intended asking and have as often forgotten—how matters stand in reference to that publication of mine, and whether there has been any practical result. I have an appointment with V. Novello to-morrow morning; and if he has only sixpence to give me as my share, I would rather not broach the subject. So please leave word at my house whether you think I should mention the matter, or whether it had better rest in eternal oblivion. I return home to-morrow at eleven o'clock to know which way you decide. The saying is: 'Merit has its crown,' so I scarcely expect I shall get as much as half-a-crown.

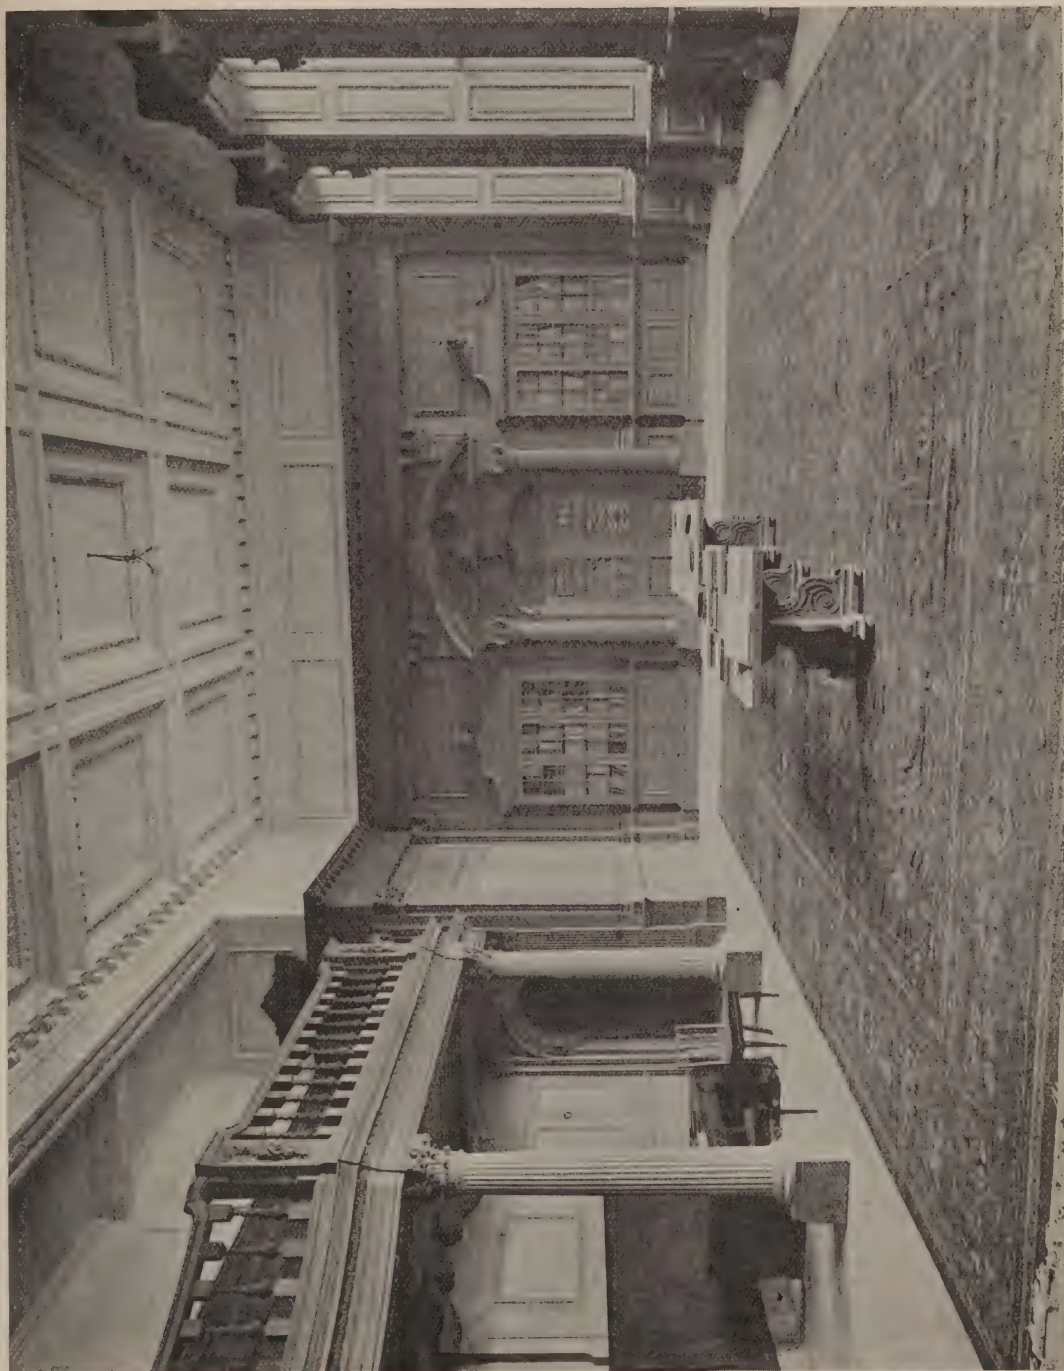

Yours,

F. MENDELSSOHN.

The composer did receive more than sixpence, or even half-a-crown. In the intervening ten months forty-eight copies had been sold, his share of the proceeds amounting to £4 16s.; but it took four years to dispose of 114 copies of a work that has since become a household word. This early publication of Mendelssohn's was soon followed by others—though not at the composer's risk!—which included 'St. Paul,' the 'Hymn of Praise,' Psalms, the D minor Pianoforte concerto, &c.

VINCENT AND JOSEPH ALFRED NOVELLO.

It was in the year 1811 that Vincent Novello, then aged thirty, published at his own expense and out of his hard earnings as a professional musician his collection of Sacred Music. The title-page was engraved by Sawyer & Son, of Dean Street, Soho. No publisher would run the risk of issuing two folio volumes of that nature: thus the foundations of the house were laid. Eighteen years afterwards (in 1829) Vincent's eldest son, Joseph Alfred Novello—then a youth nineteen years of age—commenced business at No. 67, Frith Street, Soho. No passer-by could be enticed by any outward and visible sign of a palatial establishment, as there was nothing more attractive than 'a couple of parlour windows and a glass door, with a few title-pages bearing composers' names of sterling merit, and Vincent Novello as editor.' In this modest habitation—where Vincent, the founder of the Novello business, and his numerous family resided 'over the shop'—a warm welcome would be extended to such friends as Charles Lamb, Leigh Hunt, Thomas Attwood, Madame Malibran, Felix Mendelssohn, and others who made music and created laughter under that hospitable roof. In 1834 a removal was made to No. 69, Dean Street, where the printing works of the firm remained for fifty-four years, until 1898, when they were transplanted to Hollen Street: and thus the connection of the Novello house with Soho has never been broken during the past seventy-seven years. The rapid increase of the business after the late Henry Littleton became sole proprietor (in 1866) necessitated the removal—except the printing works—to No. 1, Berners Street. This took place at the end of 1867; and now, after a period of nearly forty years, the house of Novello has returned to Soho, into its new and more commodious building situated in Wardour Street.

THE NEW BUILDING.

Before giving a brief description of the new premises, which were opened to the public on November 26, it may be stated that the extent of ground covered by Messrs. Novello's premises and leased from the Crown is more than half-an-acre—the printing and bookbinding works claiming 1,864 square yards, and the recently added block 776 square yards. The new building (of which an exterior view forms one of our extra supplements) is in the Renaissance style of architecture, with red-brick facings and stone dressings. The main entrance—No. 160, Wardour Street—consists of an open porch of Portland stone, with three arches and a projecting balcony over, carried by Ionic columns, while above this is an oriel window of five lights. This porch leads into a rectangular entrance hall on the ground floor, from which springs the main staircase leading to the first floor. The walls of this staircase are divided into panels by pilasters, and the staircase is lighted by a domed lantern. Four Ionic columns divide the staircase from the first floor landing which forms the ante-room to the Hall, where the retail part of the business will be carried on.

This magnificent apartment—44 feet by 36 feet, and 24 feet high—is lighted on the Wardour Street side by five tall, mullioned windows, and is panelled in oak with Corinthian pilasters and cornice rising to a height of nearly 17 feet. On the side opposite to the windows is a gallery supported by columns and approached by two small staircases, one on each side. Under the gallery is the fireplace, with a chimney-piece of Pavonazza marble, and an oak overmantel most elaborately carved with festoons of flowers and Cupids' heads after the manner of Grinling Gibbons. The doorways, one at each end of the Hall, are enriched with columns and pediments, while the folding doors themselves have pierced and carved panels, and immediately over each is a panel containing representations of musical instruments festooned with flowers. At either end are two bookcases in oak surmounted by a carved cornice, and the room is lighted by two large silvered electroliers of twenty-four lights each. A photograph of the Hall is given on p. 801.

Leading out of the Hall is a novel feature in a business house, viz., a spacious and well-lighted room—30 feet long by 18 feet wide—which is to be called the Novello Club Room: this Club Room is for the use of any who may visit the establishment, either to look over music, to meet private or business friends, to send a telephone message, write letters, &c. It is thought that this adjunct will be found acceptable, not only for the purposes specified, but also as a convenient rendezvous, especially for visitors from the country.

On the same floor-level as the Hall and the Club Room is a suite of rooms which includes the Board Room. The next floor contains the editorial rooms of THE MUSICAL TIMES and SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, in addition to rooms for the musical editors, large rooms for stock, &c. In the uppermost story of the building are the general and publishing offices, also the wholesale, the postal and other departments of the business.

A special feature of artistic and musical interest in the new building is the celebrated Vauxhall statue of Handel, executed in marble in 1739. This precious and masterly specimen of Roubiliac's art here finds a permanent and appropriate home, it having been presented to the Company by Mr. Alfred H. Littleton, Chairman of the Board of Directors.

The entire block of buildings—including the adjoining printing and bookbinding works—has been erected from the designs of Mr. Frank Loughborough Pearson, F.R.I.B.A.

In conclusion, while this new building has been primarily erected for the practical working and development of the business, the present Directors have always had in view that no effort should be spared in providing a structure which should constitute in some degree a tribute to the art of music; and at the same time that it should stand as a memorial to their predecessors who laboured so earnestly for the progress and ever-widening influence of that art in this country.

THE REVIVAL OF MORRIS DANCING.

What is the Morris Dance? The question is likely to evoke, even from the great majority of educated people, a somewhat vague answer—that it is an old English country dance, now for many generations almost wholly abandoned, and to-day practised only now and again, fitfully, in remote parts of the country. This is, roughly, correct; but within the past twelvemonth or so a remarkable revival of this ancient pastime, or art, has taken place, and it is thought that some account of the dance and its revival may prove of interest to musical and other readers.

Firstly, as to the question we set out with—What is the Morris? As the name in our own country and its equivalent in others—such as Moresque, Moreska, &c.—clearly denotes, the Morris had its origin in Morocco, was introduced by the Moors into Spain and southern Europe, and in the course of centuries it was adopted in some form or other by most of the European peoples. Precisely when it came to England will never be known: it may have been seen here as early as the days of Edward III., and by the time of Edward IV. it was certainly more or less a national pastime. The earliest accounts of the dance show clearly that although its peculiar steps and figures have remained in form practically unaltered, yet the spirit of them has been changed and Anglicised so as to represent in measure and movement, not mysterious and, in our eyes, fantastic Moor, but the downright and sturdy Englishman.

The Morris, regarded as a characteristic English dance, is yet not quite faithfully described as a country dance; that is a term strictly applied to dances performed by both sexes—Sir Roger de Coverley may be quoted as the most familiar—whereas the Morris is danced by a set, or 'side' as the traditional term has it, of six dancers, all of one sex. As a general rule it has been danced in England only by men; yet there have been exceptions to this; and in this latter-day revival (as will presently be told) it was a set of London working girls who gave, and are still giving, the Morris its opportunity of resuscitation. There are also solo Morris dances, which in their kind are the equivalent of the jig and strathspey; but as this modern awakening has so far been confined to the dance by sides, this article will deal with that variety alone.

To get an idea of what the Morris is like one must first rid the mind of all prevailing notions of ball-room ceremonial. Our modern dances, round or square, if performed according to regulation, should be sinuous, graceful, and generally silent, though they may, and should, betray high spirits and the joy of living; but grace and a certain dignity should always preside at their execution. The Morris is essentially a manifestation of vigour, rather than of grace. From the earliest times until the present Morris-men have always worn bells strapped upon their legs; to make these ring their loudest is to dance the steps at their best; therefore the Morris dancer's step is lusty, indeed it is best described as a vigorous kick; and when he jumps—which is very frequently—he alights, so far as the safety of limbs and body will permit, upon his heels. That may sound crude, according to accepted notions of dancing, but if it be kept in mind that the Morris is more a traditional form of physical exercise and display of sheer vitality than a school for elegance, the dance will be recognized as having a place and a function all its own.

The Morris side of six stands in two lines of three each. The figures at first sight appear bewildering and intricate, but are really few and simple. They are executed in column—that is, the dancers being in file, all facing one way; or front—that is, pairs facing each other. In column there are advancing and retiring movements, the column comes to the right-about by jumping and goes up and back again; there is also the chain, where each set of three winds in and out in a figure-of-eight pattern. In the front formation there are various ways of crossing and re-crossing, setting back to back and so forth. Then corners and centres change and re-change places in various styles. Finally, there are the Capers, where corners and centres change and re-change with curious halts and stampings, marked in the music by passages of broken and strongly accentuated rhythm. Nothing is more characteristic of the

THE MORRIS DANCE, AS DEPICTED IN AN OLD STAINED GLASS WINDOW IN A HOUSE AT BETLEY, STAFFORDSHIRE.

Morris than these Capers; anyone to whom the vigour and strangeness of the Morris appeals, will find those movements inimitably quaint and stirring.

The Morris dances may be divided into three kinds: stick, handkerchief, and corner dances. In the stick dances each member of the side holds a staff some eighteen inches long in the right hand; these staves are clashed together or thumped upon the floor; this rhythmical clashing and thumping is startling in its novelty when first beheld. In the handkerchief dances, waving of white cloths all together—at the sides, above the heads, or sometimes bunching them in the hands and striking hands across with the opposite dancer—is peculiar. In the corner dances the handkerchiefs are waved rhythmically also, but as already told the feature of these is the change and re-change of places and the caperings.

In the earliest days the music for the Morris was droned upon a bagpipe, afterwards replaced by pipe and tabor. The pipe, with three holes, was made like a flageolet, sometimes with a metal tongue; it was played with the left hand. The tabor, a miniature drum, was hung by a loop on the left thumb, and was beaten by a stick held in the right hand. These instruments, though they have been played within the memory of living men, are now fallen into disuse. Such traditional Morris-men as still exist amongst us use the fiddle, concertina, or accordion.

The Morris tunes are very simple and have a lilt and character all their own; the spirit of dancing is in every one of them. As with other folk-tunes, only very few, and these very occasionally, have been written down; like folk-songs the Morris music has been passed on from one player to another. The originators of the present revival have collected close upon thirty tunes, all undoubtedly traditional; it is probable that a systematic search would be rewarded by the discovery of hundreds of tunes—though of course many would be variants of the same tune altered according to local taste. The names of the Morris tunes are delightful; they suggest at once cheerful old age, lusty youth, and the open countryside—as, for instance, ‘Constant Billy,’ ‘Blue-eyed stranger,’ ‘Country gardens,’ and ‘Trunkles.’ The last-named, as variants of it prove, was once ‘Trunk-hose,’ and tells of the long ago.

The enthusiast in folk-music will find in the Morris tunes a wide and almost unknown field for his explorations. For all their stark simplicity, the tunes strike the ear and memory with suggestions of familiar things. To give one instance only of what a following of this suggestion may lead to: ‘Country gardens,’ heard for the first time, is instantly an old friend with a new face. Even suppose one has no knowledge of music, but just an ear for melody, the familiarity haunts one persistently, and presently out of the monotonous yet never wearisome repetition ‘The Vicar of Bray’ stands out and acknowledges the old Morris tune as the father of his fame. A keen ear and research would possibly show the Morris tune to be the source of many a national melody. Again, to illustrate the wonderful continuity of the traditional tune: last summer in the Midlands a pair of enthusiasts heard a tune played by a local Morris-man on his fiddle. It was the tune of ‘Morris off,’ to which the dancers quit the scene of their festivities. A few weeks later this same tune was found, note for note, in the Gregorian notation. An old French writer, describing the ‘Morisque’ as he had seen it danced when a boy early in the 16th century, gives the same tune, almost to a note identical.

The Morris was danced throughout England up to the fall of the Stuarts; the soberer tone adopted in all national pastimes and customs with the rise of Puritanism brought a marked decline in the popularity of the Morris; and it has declined ever since, until, less than a twelvemonth ago, interest in it was revived.

The resuscitation of the Morris came about in this way. An amateur teacher of singing to a London working girls’ club was in search of something fresh, simple and sincere to give to his class; the songs must be very simple because not one of the pupils knew a note of music. The teacher fell in with a collector of English folk-songs, and tried some of these simple strains upon his pupils. The experiment proved successful from the beginning; the songs were not only learned very readily, but they spread at once, not only throughout the club, but away beyond it. Encouraged by this sudden awakening of the old country songs in the heart of London, a fresh experiment was made. The collector had, some years before, noted down some Morris tunes, but had never seen his way to making use of them. The man who had supplied the tunes—a leader in Morris dancing—and another from the same side of dancers, were brought up to London. The Morris dance flourished at once, and astonishingly, just as the folk-songs had flourished, amongst these working girls, strangers to the countryside. They learned the dances with quite wonderful readiness; and when they gave their annual private performance to friends of the club, the audience, one and all, were so struck with its appeal and novelty—although every item was very old indeed—that the principal of the club was urged to repeat the performance in public. This was done in April of the present year. The hall was crowded to the doors, and many were turned away. The performance has been repeated, and will be given again. On every occasion, so far, there has been the same keen public interest shown. It should be added that in the audiences literally every element of contemporary society has been represented.

But a well-filled hall was hardly the most eloquent testimony offered that this revival was really widespread. That it was not merely fugitive curiosity which drew the audiences was shown by the number of inquiries that poured in from all over the Kingdom, and indeed beyond—even, in one case, from Japan: inquiries as to how others might also revive these more than half-forgotten songs and dances. The songs, being printed, could easily be passed on, but with the Morris dances it was otherwise. The only knowledge available was with these younger Morris-folk of London and with the traditional dancers here and there throughout the country. Neither tunes nor instructions for dancing existed anywhere in print. So far as it was possible the girls who in every part of our life towards a return to purely English arts and customs, and a turning away from others borrowed from abroad, and not truly representative of the national spirit. Be this as it may, as to the vigour of this recrudescence of all but forgotten things, and as to its constant tendency to increase in reach and strength, there can be no doubt whatsoever. These Londoners

A FOLK-SONG DISCUSSION.

It is evident that the cult of folk-songs is interesting ever-widening circles, and it even bids fair to become a social fashion, with a pose and the usual indiscriminating admiration. There is a dim impression gaining vogue that if a melody is fairly old it must be good. A discussion that arose in The Morning Post at the sultry end of the recent large gooseberry season usefully compressed the pros and cons of the existing situation as regards English folk-songs. It is a pity that the complete correspondence elicited cannot be re-published in one cover for the benefit of many interested in the subject. To the uninitiated it may seem odd that the folk-song enthusiasts should discuss with such remarkable fervour the evolution and peculiarities of different versions of a vast number of short melodies, displaying more or less irregular rhythm, and often associated with words still more irregular from the moral point of view. One may claim to have a sincere admiration for many of these tunes and to tolerate the words because of the beauty of the music, and yet feel some surprise that folk-songs in general should be regarded with something approaching superstitious awe and be credited with omnipotent potentialities. We are told impressively that the seeds of the future specifically national art are to be found in this type of music—in, say, ‘The seeds of love,’ ‘The Golden Vanity’ (we know six versions of this stirring tune), ‘The Bay of Biscay,’ ‘Tom Bowling’ and, probably, ‘The Spotted Cow.’ We are to reconstruct and quicken the nation’s art by looking backward and accepting an inheritance we have hitherto suffered ourselves to neglect. But surely, in view of the present development of the art, the prospect of our future composers finding inspiration from this source is unlikely.

The Morning Post discussion was a triangular duel between those who are incredulous as to the value of folk-songs, and others who would narrow the term to describe only old traditional compositely-evolved melodies, and still others who would include modern national songs in the category. Miss A. E. Keeton, who so inconsiderately disturbed the holiday repose of many good people by throwing down the gauntlet, stated roundly that England had no folk-songs! She argued that the fact that Purcell ‘made no use of a folk element leads to the conviction that even in his day it was already practically non-existent among the English people.’ The paucity of English folk-music was ascribed partly to the fact that ‘we possess no relics of any really national and typical musical instrument’: a theory which provokes speculation as to what England’s position might have been if only she had invented and used, say, the bagpipes! Then Miss Keeton said that the desire of the people for the printed words of the ballads sung led to the preference for poetical over purely musical literature, and she went on to remark that :

In lieu of vainly seeking for a folk-song basis, our young composers are wisely finding inspiration in our literature. With all this before us the late-in-time labour of an English Folk-Song Society, founded in 1898, is merely a work of supererogation. The results of its members’ researches, moreover, as occasionally brought forward by these enthusiasts, are scarcely likely to inculcate a profound belief in a marvellous modern efflorescence of English melody with anyone who has happened to sojourn in a fertile land of folk-song, Wales or Russia, for example. The generality of these so-called English folk-tunes are distinctly inferior to such songs as ‘Cherry ripe,’ ‘Wapping old stairs,’ or ‘Tom Bowling.’ These latter come under the generic heading of ‘Old English,’ and have rightly won their place in the national affection; and it is these and others of their type which should be freely disseminated amongst the masses as a humanizing factor. No other country possesses such a wealth of songs and vocal music of this particular kind.

All this was, of course, more than the flesh and blood of a folk-song enthusiast could stand, especially when personified in Mr. Cecil Sharp, who was at that time picking up or taking down new-old folk-songs by the dozen in the wilds of Somerset. A trenchant letter from his ready pen soon appeared in which, after ridiculing the preference of ‘Cherry ripe,’ &c., to West Country peasant-songs, he said :

Miss Keeton’s article bristles with statements that I would wish to traverse. I cannot, for instance, accept the dictum, with regard to Purcell, that ‘there is no suggestion whatever of any intrinsically national inspiration in his style.’ I find much that is peculiarly English in his music, although no doubt there are traces of foreign influence as well. Still, Purcell has been dubbed, and not, I think, without good reason, ‘the originator of English melody,’ and extolled as the man ‘who excelled all others in his accurate, vigorous, and energetic setting of English words.’ Again, it is not true to say that Purcell made no use of folk-song in his music. Be this as it may, Miss Keeton violates the elementary laws of logic when she argues that because Purcell made no use of folk-song, it was therefore ‘already practically non-existent among the English people.’ I agree, however, that since Purcell’s day we have produced no music that is essentially English; but I attribute this, not as Miss Keeton does, to the supposed lack of a national literature of folk-song, but to the fact that we have ignored our national heritage.

Then as to England having no national instrument, Mr. Sharp asked :

Has Miss Keeton never heard of the pipe and tabour, or ‘whittle and dub,’ as they were popularly called? or of the morris dance which has flourished in England for five or six centuries and is still danced in many country villages? Why, when Handel was asked to point out the peculiar taste in dancing and music of the several nations of Europe he replied by ascribing ‘to the French the minuet, to the Spaniard the saraband . . . to the English the hornpipe, or morrice dance.’ Miss Keeton seems to be unaware, too, that all folk-dance tunes were in the first instance song tunes, and that the dancers frequently sang the words of the song as they danced. I have collected many morris tunes myself, and their names in every case indicate the songs from which they sprang.

And as to the potentialities of the cult he remarked :

I would also point out that history provides not a single instance of a national school of music that has been founded upon anything else than national folk-music. I believe, therefore, that it is to our folk-music that we must look for the future of English music. Let us, therefore, before it is too late, set to work to collect our traditional music, to publish it, and to teach it to the young people of the present and succeeding generations. If this be done we shall not have long to wait for an English Glinka, who will do for us what the distinguished Russian composer has done for his country.

Then came a characteristically sane, judicial and well-informed letter from Miss Lucy Broadwood, secretary of the English Folk-Song Society. Apropos of Purcell she asked :

Has Miss Keeton studied the many ponderous volumes issued by the Purcell Society, which form but a small part of Purcell's work? Has she carefully examined his play-music, and the many other compositions at present accessible only in their very rare original printed form, or in manuscript? If so she unaccountably overlooked the fact that Purcell both used English folk-tunes and imitated them closely. I am away from England and have not my scores to refer to, but the following examples at once occur to me: 'Cold and raw' (the favourite air of King Charles I., and an old English song popular long before its introduction into Scotland); 'Shackerley Hay,' and 'Lillibullero,' which may or may not have been Purcell's own composition, but which is essentially of the folk-song type. These are a few of the tunes which he was especially fond of using, and in various forms, amongst others as inner and bass parts for viols. In Playford's 'Dancing Master' there are several tunes unmistakably English and rustic in character (I will cite only 'The hole in the wall' and 'Enfield Green'—or Common) which appear, without name of any kind, in Purcell's play-music as hornpipes and so forth. In his 'Lessons for the harpsichord' we find many little airs of the English folk-song type, besides imitations or arrangements of Scotch and Irish tunes. Finally, I call to mind a rollicking harvest-home song in 'King Arthur,' which contains the painful statement 'We have cheated the parson, we'll cheat him again.' This song is similar to a 'Health' which, to various tunes, is still sung by unlettered labourers in unsophisticated corners of England at harvest suppers. Internal evidence points strongly to Purcell having adapted his song from that of country folk; but supposing the contrary to be the case, it would merely prove that Purcell must have been steeped in English peasant song to have been able to reproduce its whole spirit so faithfully.

An editorial article next appeared in the Morning Post, strongly advocating the teaching of folk-songs to young people, and Miss Keeton returned to reply to Mr. Sharp. She stated that before the organization of the Folk-song Society (1898) she had delved for songs in various English counties, and she went on to say :

I then formed the view, which I am not yet disposed to abandon, that these songs—with, on the one hand, their absence of any special racial characteristics, and on the other, certain distinctly modern snatches of rhythm and melody—had drifted in scraps from our towns, or many of them more probably equally in scraps from the Continent. I find them, therefore, no more indigenous to an uncultivated English soil than is the popular air of 'Home, sweet home,' for instance. I would even take the examples of Dorian modes in Mr. Sharp's collection as distinct evidence in favour of my theory.

That Purcell was the culmination of English music is a well-worn, antiquated tradition, which should have been thrown overboard long ago; and have we still, as Mr. Sharp, too, contends, to wait for our English Glinka? I venture to find in Elgar, at any rate in his earlier work, something far more intrinsically national than can be found in Purcell. . . . Is not Mr. Sharp in his zeal also inclined to put the cart before the horse? He apparently believes that the mere fact of collecting and publishing volumes of folk-songs must lay the foundation of a great national school of music. One may, however, remind him that the creativeness of Haydn, Schubert, Glinka, and others was scarcely inspired by collections of tunes 'edited with pianoforte accompaniments' by academics and antiquaries.

Next came on the scene Mr. Arthur Hervey, the music critic and composer. He hit both sides impartially when he said :

I have been amused as well as interested by the controversy relating to folk-songs. Miss A. E. Keeton declares that we have no national folk-songs, while Mr. Cecil J. Sharp spends his time in noting down tunes sung by peasants in various country districts in order to prove the contrary. Then the writer of the leading article states that if Mr. Sharp is right 'there is ground for the hope that England may yet develop a national music.'

I confess that I am unable to share that hope. Mr. Sharp's researches may be very interesting and lead to the discovery of some curious and attractive tunes, but that these tunes will ever serve as the basis of an English national school of music seems to me more than doubtful.

Miss Keeton advises composers to seek inspiration in English literature. Surely this is what they have been doing for years.

The a priori assumption that we possess no national musical style at present is one I am unable to accept. I grant that this style is a composite one and is not devoid of alien elements. Of what nation, however, can the same not be said? Are alien influences invariably bad?

How can any composer avoid them, unless he be brought up in a Somersetshire village exclusively on traditional folk-songs?

Have not all great composers been influenced more or less by the music of other nations?

It is the duty of a composer to study all kinds of music, and if he is gifted with any originality this will be sure to assert itself in time.

A special national style cannot be manufactured to order, neither is the existence of what may be termed a national 'school' of music at all desirable. Every composer who has a spark of individuality will certainly decline to be bound by any rules compelling him to seek inspiration in one quarter or another.

I am absolutely certain that a new score by Richard Strauss or Debussy will prove far more attractive to our younger composers than any number of volumes of Somersetshire folk-songs. This is, of course, no reason why Mr. Sharp should not continue his researches, which from an antiquarian point of view cannot fail to possess interest.

Dr. Somervell then intervened with a long letter in which he expressed his deep appreciation of the beauty of old English folk-songs, and at the same time pleaded for the inclusion of comparatively modern songs in the category. He remarked :

I think it is time to protest against the cheap cant which assumes that no one belongs to the English 'folk' unless he is at the ploughtail, and to revert in principle, if not in the use of the word, to the wide catholicity of Germany, whence we have borrowed the term folk-song.

Germans recognize the fact that any song, by whomsoever made, which obtains wide national acceptance and survives the test of time is in its essence a song of the German people, expressing the emotions of Germans in a congenial manner; that it is therefore entitled to a place in their Volkslieder collections; is worthy to be printed, to be lovingly preserved; to be handed down from generation to generation, enjoyed and played with by babies and musicians alike, and may be enshrined as one of the world's great treasures through the latter process.

And after deploring the destructive influences of Puritanism, he said :

Let us not cut ourselves off from any part of our great heritage. Let us freely accept our Puritan past and whatever it contains of value. Let us use our older peasant songs, beloved of Mr. Sharp, as well as the songs so justly appreciated by Miss Keeton, many of which are based on peasant work, while others are sincere national expressions of new conditions, historical events, fresh responsibilities, and wider aspects of life.

It must be inferred from the last sentence that it is by the words rather than by the music of the later stratum of songs that we are to be saved, for no tune can give us 'ideas of the wider aspects of life,' &c. In reply to this, Mr. Cecil Sharp wrote a very able letter, in which he said :

I agree that it would be 'cheap cant' to assume that 'no one belongs to the English folk unless he is at the plough-tail.' But it is quite another thing to insist that the songs which have been unconsciously evolved by the peasantry should not be confounded with those which have been deliberately composed by cultivated musicians. This is not merely a question of nomenclature; for the two types are inherently and widely different from one another, not only in the matter of their birth but as art-products as well. They have points of resemblance, no doubt, but these are superficial only, and they should not blind the eyes of the expert to the essential differences, which lie deeper and are fundamental. The two types are as easily differentiated as chalk from cheese, or, to use a more apposite comparison, as the blush rose of the hedgerow from the latest production of the nursery gardener. Would Dr. Somervell call it 'cheap cant' to protest against the classification of 'Casabianca' as a folk-ballad?

He recommended Dr. Somervell to Vacate his armchair for a week or two, forget his theories, arm himself with a stout shovel and pick—for diamonds lie deep—betake himself to the country-side, visit the village taverns, sit in the thatched cottages of outlying hamlets and listen to the peasants singing their own folk-songs.

And he prophesied that if Dr. Somervell were to do this :

On his return home he will burn his banners with their strange devices of 'Tom Bowling,' 'Casabianca,' 'Home, sweet home,' and the like, and forthwith enrol himself among the select company of the 'cheap canters.'

A new world, the existence of which he has hitherto denied, will be opened before his eyes, and I incidentally shall gain also, for it will relieve me of the well-nigh hopeless task of trying to make him understand that the folk-song proper is a very different thing from the hybrid variety, or the 'composed' song which he now champions with such pathetic ardour.

Miss Keeton then returned to the fray, and in a long article showed herself to be impenitent. She scoffed at the collector, who chiefly recalls the labours of Pickwick 'tracing to their source the mighty ponds of Hampstead,' and she argued, incidentally, that the pianoforte is responsible for the 'lamentable decay in vocal music throughout (!) England.' Dr. Somervell's contention that the Puritan revolution destroyed art was said to be a 'well-worn, fallacious, learnt-by-rote tradition which might profitably be abolished once and for all.'

Whatever differences of opinion there are as to the utility and future influence of folk-songs, there is a general agreement that every endeavour should be made to collect written versions of these songs before the only people who now know them die off. Good, bad, and indifferent, they should be taken down and examined at leisure as to their merits. As things are in this country this task must be undertaken by private individuals and self-supporting societies. It is curious that in Russia, regarding the social condition of which country we hear so much that is painful, the work of folk-song collection is undertaken by departments of the St. Petersburg Imperial Geographical Society and of the Imperial Society of Natural Sciences and Ethnography. One of the most important contributions made in recent years to the world's folk-song literature is the handsome volume 'The peasant songs of Great Russia,' collected and transcribed from phonograms by Eugenie Lineff, and published amid all the storm and stress of 1905 by the Imperial Academy of Science, St. Petersburg, and by David Nutt, London. In this absorbingly interesting work Madame Lineff, in an elaborate introduction (given in English), deals skilfully with the history and problems of folk-song collecting. As many of the Russian peasant songs are in polyphony peculiarly evolved and in the nature of improvisations, there were special difficulties in obtaining notational records by ear. The phonograph was therefore employed and the results afterwards analysed. In this way 500 records were obtained, and from these Madame Lineff has selected the music of twenty-three songs, the words and a full account of which are given in English in the book. As to the performance of peasant songs by trained artists Madame Lineff says :

It is just because the whole power of the peasant song lies in free improvisation, that the practised execution of a folk-song even by the best artists cannot compare with the genuine peasant performance. The latter have always an advantage which we can only acquire by putting great strain on ourselves. The peasants improvise the song, while we learn it from music. In the performance of the peasants the song flows in a continuous stream; in our singing the division into bars and notes is always apparent. The peasant 'tells' his song in protracted musical speech; we sing the melody, frequently without knowing the words and always very badly pronouncing them. The peasant loves his song, is enraptured by it; we condescend to it. I am convinced that until we live in our song, as every true artist lives in his work, our execution will continue to be weak and pale. In order to sing folk-songs well it is necessary to know them, to work at them not only theoretically, but to sing, to sing and to sing them. We must try to learn to improvise them.

The concluding paragraphs of this essay apply as forcibly to England as they do to Russia :

I feel strongly convinced that if whole troops of collectors were scattered all over Russia, many more precious specimens could be found.

Old men and women still remember them. In many places there are singers such 'as cannot be found anywhere in the district.' If haste were made to collect songs everywhere, that is to say, if a general collecting of songs were properly organized over as large a district as possible and during a certain period, it is scarcely possible to foresee the wonderful discoveries in the domain of popular musical art that might be made.

Delay is dangerous. There is no doubt that many old songs are dying out. It is true that a new folk-song is being created. It will, perhaps, develop in an interesting direction. But upon us, living at the time when there are still persons who know the old songs, rests the duty of transcribing them so as to preserve them in correct form.

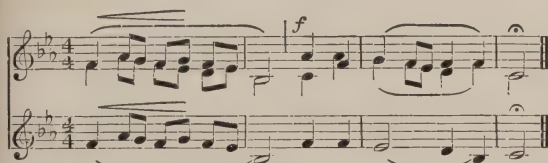

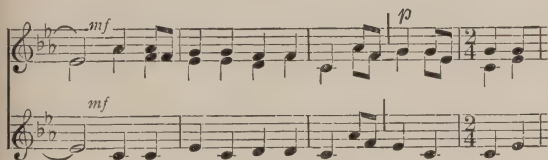

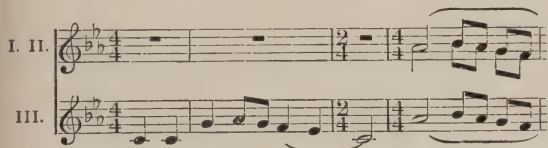

In addition to the musical illustrations the book contains two ingeniously contrived coloured charts which graphically show the rise and fall of the melody and the relations of duration of the notes in several of the songs.

The following extract from the music will give some idea of the character of the songs. It was sung to Madame Lineff by a group led by Anna Egorovna Podtynnikova, 'a clever, serious old woman of about sixty.' The words apostrophise the hills which have brought forth stone 'that burneth,' underneath which flows a cold rivulet on the banks of which stands a bush of willows. In the bush an eagle sits, and in his claws he holds a raven black. The rest apparently is left to imagination:

YE HILLS.

RUSSIAN POLYPHONIC FOLK-SONG.

This is the version sung to the fourth verse. No two verses are alike as to harmony, but the melody, except for fitting in syllables, is the same throughout the verses. It is interesting to note that Madame Lineff says that 'Tchaikovsky is full of echoes of popular melodies, although, according to his own confession, he was little acquainted with folk-songs.'

The notice of the Hereford Musical Festival (p. 688 of our October issue) needs to be amplified so far as regards the special opening service in the cathedral on Sunday afternoon, September 9. This impressive service began with Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'A song of thanksgiving,' from his orchestral Suite 'London day by day' (Op. 64). This lento espressivo movement—one that is admirably suited to the solemnity of a cathedral—is dated 'June 1, 1902.' On the afternoon of that day the news reached England that peace had been proclaimed in South Africa after the terrible war in that country. Ere nightfall of the glad day the composer had conceived the plan of his 'Song of thanksgiving' and begun work upon it: thus the piece is a genuine product of the feeling of the moment and, at the same time, its adequate expression. In order to complete the record, it should be added that Handel's Overture to 'Samson' and Beethoven's 'Hallelujah' chorus were performed at this special opening service in Hereford Cathedral.

Occasional Notes.

I heard the bells on Christmas Day,
Their old, familiar carols play,
And wild and sweet
The words repeat
Of peace on earth, good-will to men!
And thought how, as the day had come,
The belfries of all Christendom
Had rolled along
The unbroken song
Of peace on earth, good-will to men!
Till, ringing, singing on its way,
The world revolved from night to day,
A voice, a chime,
A chant sublime
Of peace on earth, good-will to men!

Longfellow.

Typically Hans von Bülow is an anecdote which Mr. John Francis Barnett relates in his book 'Musical reminiscences and impressions' (Hodder & Stoughton) reviewed on p. 827. At one of Bülow's pianoforte recitals two ladies passed close to him, on their way to their seats, just as he had finished the Introduction to Beethoven's Sonata Pathétique. This so annoyed the redoubtable Hans that he purposely adapted the speed of the Allegro to the pace of those fair footsteps. When the ladies realized the joke that was being perpetrated at their expense, they hurried to their places as quickly as they could short of running, which gave Bülow the opportunity of accelerating his pace, with this result, as given by Mr. Barnett:

How peripatetically pathetic!

The utterances and writings of great musicians should be taken cautiously, especially in the case of one so self-satisfied as Spohr. After he had conducted a Philharmonic concert (in 1820) with a baton, he records, in his autobiography: 'The triumph of the baton as a time-giver was decisive, and no one was seen any more seated at the pianoforte during the performance of symphonies and overtures.' But Spohr, simple-minded man, was quite wrong in taking the flattering unction to himself of uprooting a long-established custom in this country. As a matter of fact, it was not until twelve years after Spohr's visit that the baton came into use as a conducting stick in England. We are led to repeat this fact because Spohr's misleading statement has quite recently been quoted in an article 'Concerning conductors.' The history of the case was fully stated in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1896 (p. 372), and epitomised in the article 'Baton' in the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of music and musicians,' vol. i., p. 206.

A sequel, even though it be somewhat statistical, to the article on 'Lady violinists' in our October and November issues, may not be without interest. The following figures refer to lady students of the violin during the present term at seven leading music schools at home and abroad, from information officially supplied by the respective Principals or other authorities, specially for these 'Occasional Notes':

Royal Academy of Music	-	-	-	-	72
Royal College of Music	-	-	-	-	88
Guildhall School of Music	-	-	-	-	230
Royal Manchester College of Music	-	-	-	-	15
Birmingham and Midland Institute School of Music	-	-	-	-	65
Paris Conservatoire de Musique	-	-	-	-	28
Leipzig Conservatorium	-	-	-	-	53

As we gave the date (1872) of the first lady student of the violin at the Royal Academy of Music, similar information may be furnished in regard to the Conservatoires of Paris and Leipzig. In the year 1795 (or 1796) a Mlle. Felicité Lebrun, a pupil of Baillet's, took the second prize for violin-playing at the Paris Conservatoire, and the first prize in the following academical year. At Leipzig the earliest lady student of the violin was Fräulein Caroline Julie Gleim, who entered in April, 1847, during the last year of Mendelssohn's régime. Neither of these ladies seems to have made her mark. By the way, it appears that the long period of nearly fifty years elapsed before a second lady violinist sought the tuition of the Paris Conservatoire. Coming nearer home—that is to say, north of the Tweed—Sir Alexander Mackenzie writes, in response to an inquiry as to early lady violinists in Scotland: 'In my young days there were two excellent girl-players of the violin in Edinburgh, where they were born—the sisters Drechsler-Hamilton. With their brother Carl, a violoncellist, and their father, a viola player, they played quartets; moreover they were uncommonly good soloists. That would be about 1863. They were very popular in Edinburgh and deservedly so. Otherwise I cannot recall any other instances public or private. The movement seems to have started with the advent of Madame Norman Neruda (Lady Hallé). I may add that the Drechsler-Hamiltons were grandchildren of the well-known violoncellist Karl Drechsler (vide Grove).' It seems that the fame of these young ladies spread beyond Edinburgh, as in Dr. Alfred Dörfel's invaluable 'Geschichte der Gewandhausconcerte zu Leipzig' (1884) we find the names of Bertha and Emmy Hamilton, of Edinburgh, in the list of violinists who appeared at the famous Gewandhaus concerts, the date of their performances being November 21, 1869.

A royal lady-violinist belongs to the 18th century in the person of Mary Adélaïde, Princess of France, and daughter of Louis XV. 'The real Louis XV.,' an interesting book by Lt.-Col. A. C. P. Rider Haggard, contains the following reference to the lady—Madame Adélaïde of France, the title by which she was known. Here is the extract:

Especially was she uncouth in her musical tendencies. Adoring music, she played upon all instruments, and upon all equally badly. The result of her playing was but to produce a series of discordant sounds, which merely varied in intensity according to whether she played loudly or softly. The King was well aware of her utter want of ear, and the Duc de Luynes records that often for fun, just to hear how badly she could play, Louis would hand his daughter a violin. As a rule she preferred to play loudly and grievously.

It is a wonder that the King did not rule his daughter out of court previous to her loud performances.

In olden times St. Cecilia's day (November 22) was regarded by the musicians of London as a day to be commemorated, it being the anniversary of the martyrdom of St. Cecilia, the patroness of music and musicians. The earliest recorded celebration of the kind is of the year 1683, when members of 'The Musical Society attended Divine service at St. Bride's Church, Fleet Street, where a choral service, which included an anthem occasionally composed for the festival, was sung, and a sermon, usually in defence of church music, was preached. The worshippers thereafter repaired to another place where an ode in praise of music, written and composed expressly for the festival, was performed, after which performers and listeners dined.' Henry Purcell, composed the ode for the year 1683, and subsequent composers were Dr. Blow, Daniel Purcell, John Eccles, and others. The finest ode written for these celebrations was 'Alexander's Feast,' from the pen of John Dryden. Writing to his son in September, 1697, the poet says:

I am writing a song for St. Cecilia's Feast, who, you know, is the patroness of Music. This is troublesome, and in no way beneficial; but I could not deny the stewards, who came in a body to my house to desire that kindness, one of them being Mr. Bridgeman, whose parents are your mother's friends.

The St. Cecilia celebrations seem to have come to an end in London in the year 1703. From 1684 to 1700 (with few exceptions) the concert took place annually at Stationers' Hall, the price of hiring it being, till 1694, only £2; afterwards raised in consideration of the damage caused by fixing the scaffolding, &c., to £4 or £5; and in 1700 to six guineas.

The Worshipful Company of Musicians revived this ancient and interesting custom on November 22 (St. Cecilia's Day) by attending Evensong at St. Paul's Cathedral. A procession, with the banner of the Company, was formed of the members, wearing gowns, which made its way to the choir of the cathedral. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to Sir John Stainer's setting in A, and the anthem was 'Let the bright Seraphim,' sung by all the cathedral chorists, followed by 'Let their celestial concerts all unite,' from Handel's 'Samson.' Mr. Charles Macpherson, sub-organist of the cathedral—in the absence of Sir George Martin (a member of the Musicians' Company)—presided at the organ, his voluntaries being Smart's Andante in G and two movements from Rheinberger's Sonata in C minor. In the evening the Livery Club of the Worshipful Company of Musicians and their guests dined together at Stationers' Hall, when an interesting selection of vocal and instrumental music was performed, the programme including Handel's overtures to the 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' and 'Alexander's Feast,' Byrd's madrigal (five voices) 'Come, let us sing with merry glee divine Cecilia's praise,' and Webbe's glee 'St. Cecilia,' in addition to two movements—'Celtic Legend' and 'Scherzo capriccioso'—from a Suite for violin (Op. 68) composed by Sir Alexander Mackenzie at the request of Mr. W. H. Ash, one of the Liverymen of the Company, and performed for the first time on this occasion. The programme was as usual most tastefully got up, with excellent reproductions of two panels—St. Cecilia and Singing Angels—from the celebrated altar-piece at Ghent, painted by the brothers Hubert and Jan Van Eyck in the 15th century.

At the annual Court dinner of the Musicians' Company—held at Stationers' Hall on October 30—an excellent selection of music was performed by students of the Royal College of Music, one of whom, Mr. James Friskin, was presented with the silver medal of the Company.

Miss Muriel Foster, by reason of her marriage, has bidden farewell to the concert-room, her last public appearance having been at the concert given by Miss Katie Eadie on October 29 at Bechstein Hall. Much regret is naturally felt that so brilliant a career should thus be prematurely brought to a close; but those who have come under the spell of that beautiful voice and artistic personality will join in wishing every happiness to the gifted singer. A biographical sketch, with special portrait of Miss Muriel Foster, appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of March, 1904.

Anyone interested in bells and bell-lore will be glad to have their attention drawn to a review (on p. 828 of the present issue) of the Rev. Dr. Raven's book on the subject. In his concluding chapter the erudite and genial author gives a 'composition' which he copied in 1852 from the belfry of Shilling Okeford, otherwise Shillingstone, Dorset. He says: 'It is a fine specimen of what may be effected by neglect of punctuation and orthography':

Praise the Lord with Lowd Symbols, if you curse or sware during the time of ringing you shall pay threepence.

Below this are the lines:

There is no musick play'd or sung
Is like Good Bells if well Rung
Put off your hat coat & spurs
And see you make no brawls or iares
Or if you chance to curse or sware
Be sure you shall pay sixpence here
Or if you chance to break a stay
Eighteenpence you shall pay
Or if you ring with gurse or belt
We will have sixpence or your pelt.
1767.

With a touch of sly humour Dr. Raven continues: 'Here are several points for the higher critics. The penalty for the mere casualty (as it is beautifully expressed) of a curse is in verse double what it is in prose. It looks as if the prose was by a later hand. In the last couplet the memory of the versifier has failed him, for the ordinary reading in other towers is:

Or if you ring with belt or gurse
We will have sixpence or your purse.'

The will of Mrs. Lewis-Hill has not only been proved legally, but it has proved to be a very remarkable document. The art of music had a warm corner in the testator's heart, so much so that she bequeathed the sum of £5,000 to the Royal Society of Musicians. The Royal Academy of Music—which she liberally endowed with scholarships during her lifetime—was not forgotten, among the specific public bequests being the following:

To Sir Alexander Mackenzie, or other the president of the Royal Academy of Music, 'my finest Strad violin, which was valued at £1,500,' for the use of the 'Ada Lewis' scholars, at the discretion of the president.

To the Royal Academy of Music, certain pianos and stringed instruments, a 'cello, and the full Steinway grand, 'for special occasions.'

No less interesting are the following testamentary dispositions:

'To my quintette of artists, in recognition of many happy evenings of music':

Benna Schonberger, £1,000 and a life annuity of £300.

Tivadar Nachez, £2,000 and the second 'Strad.'

William H. Squire, £1,000 and the 'cello.

Madame Marie Rose, £3,000.

Mr. Hobday, £500 and the viola.

This music-loving lady directed that a portion of her wines and cigars—the latter said on the best authority to be 'very good'—should be distributed as presents among friends, including Sir Alexander Mackenzie, who also is further benefited by a legacy of £2,000: therefore, so far as the Principal of the Royal Academy of Music is concerned, the will of Mrs. Lewis-Hill has not ended in smoke.

The Hallé Orchestra Pension Fund is, we are glad to learn, making good progress. During the year which ended September 30 the capital has been increased by £652 4s., making a total of £3,811 18s. 1d. In sending us a copy of the annual report and balance sheet, the Hon. Secretary, Mr. Carl Fuchs, says: 'It would be a good thing if you would kindly mention that bequests, such as are frequently left to the Royal Society of Musicians, would be most acceptable.' To this bequest request we gladly comply, merely adding: 'Where there's a will there's a way'!

Can Municipal music be made to pay? This question has been answered in the affirmative by Margate. So successful have been the Municipal concerts during the past summer that there is a balance on the right side of the account to the tune of £2,085. The secretary of the committee, in giving some particulars of the scheme, says:

I have managed these concerts, under the Fêtes Committee, since they were founded, and there has not been any year to approach 1906 as a financial success, both for the town and the entertainers. It is to be noted that all charges, such as lighting, painting, labour, &c., are borne by the committee, and that we allowed this year for depreciation of music-stands, uniforms, chairs, fittings, &c., the sum of £309 17s. 2d. The most successful 'pitch' this year was the Oval bandstand, the concerts there realizing £2,708 16s. 8d. At the Fort we took £1,679 18s., and on the sands £1,266 7s. 4d. The Westbrook bandstand realized £531 17s. 4d. All this money, you must remember, is the result of a uniform charge of 3d. for each chair. We have a working capital of £200, and every penny of profit goes to the town. That Municipal music in Margate has been a financial success is obvious. It seems to me to follow naturally that artistically the entertainments must have been good, otherwise why should people have patronized them so liberally as to give us a profit on the year's working of over £2,000?

Not only have the numerous visitors to Margate derived keen enjoyment from the performances of the municipally-provided band at its different 'pitches'—high and low—but the residents of that ozone-charged watering-place rejoice in the fact that the profits therefrom have reduced the rates by 3d. in the £! Is not this first-rate?

London is shortly to be provided with a new concert-hall. It is to be built on the western side of Great Portland Street, on the site of St. Paul's Church. That sacred but unprepossessing edifice was erected in 1764 on the site of the 'Marylebone basin,' which was a reservoir of water for the supply of that necessity of life to the inhabitants round about. The new building is to be called St. Paul's Hall, presumably after the ecclesiastical structure which it displaces. The exterior design of the Hall is classic in detail, the front facing Great Portland Street being appropriately built in Portland stone; the seating capacity is 1200, exclusive of the orchestra. Mr. A. Blomfield Jackson is the architect to the promoters of this recent addition to the concert-halls of the metropolis. It should be recalled that Great Portland Street is not without its musical associations. During the night of June 4, 1826, Weber died in the house now numbered 103 and still standing; and, during his earliest visits to England—in 1829, 1832, and 1833 (twice)—Mendelssohn lodged at No. 79 (formerly No. 103) in the same street, though the house has recently been rebuilt.

Mr. W. H. Grattan Flood writes in reference to Mr. Frank Kidson's article on 'Old Fiddlers' Books,' which appeared in our November issue, p. 740:

Under the title of 'Drum in a Beck,' Mr. Kidson prints a well-known Irish double-jig, and he says that the tune, so far as he knows, 'is now first printed.' I have seen it printed in three forms, and under three different names. As recently as 1903 it appeared in O'Neill's 'Music of Ireland,' where it will be found among the double-jigs, as 'Ballyboy Fair,' also with its Irish title. I have seen it adapted to an Anglo-Irish song, 'Biddy, now can't you be easy,' and again as 'Paddy, what made you come over?' It is now thirty-five years since I first heard the tune, one that is still popular all over Ireland. The late Mr. R. M. Levey used it in one of his pantomime quadrilles.

The draft programme of the Cardiff Musical Festival of 1907 has just been issued. Six new works are promised—four choral and two orchestral. Mr. Granville Bantock will furnish 'Omar Khayyam' (Part 2), and Dr. Frederic Cowen (the conductor of the festival) a work for solo contralto and chorus entitled 'He giveth His beloved sleep.' The remaining choral novelties are to be from the pens of Sir Hubert Parry and Mr. David Evans, while Mr. Arthur Hervey and Dr. Vaughan Williams will provide the new orchestral compositions. The following works will also be performed:

CHORAL: Messiah, The Golden Legend, Phœbus and Pan (Bach), Tannhäuser (Act 3), Mass in E flat (Schubert), Spring (Haydn), Psalm 150 (Franck), Finale to Loreley (Mendelssohn), 'Glory, honour, praise, and power' (Mozart), and The Kingdom (Elgar.)

ORCHESTRAL: Symphonies in C minor (Beethoven), in E minor (Tchaikovsky), and Romeo and Juliet (Berlioz); Overtures Leonora, No. 3 (Beethoven) and The butterfly's ball (Cowen); Symphonic poem Don Juan (Strauss).

The Stratford Musical Festival of 1907 will complete twenty-five years of its existence, this competitive music-making having been started by Mr. J. Spencer Curwen in 1882. To celebrate the event a 'Silver Jubilee Souvenir' has been issued giving the syllabus of next year's competitions, with portraits of the officials and judges, and other features of interest.

The 'Proceedings of the Musical Association' for the thirty-second session (1905-6) have now been issued. The volume contains eight papers—one less than the previous issue—as follows, with the names of the lecturers:

Development of the resources of the organ	Mr. Thomas Casson.
Some characteristics of Heinrich Schütz	Dr. E. W. Naylor.
Mozart's early efforts in opera	Mr. Clifford B. Edgar.
Leonardo Leo	Mr. Edward J. Dent.
German Hymnody from the 12th to the middle of the 17th century	Rev. G. R. Woodward.
The function of the organ in accompanying choral and orchestral works	Mr. H. Heathcote Statham.
The study of the history of music	Dr. F. G. Shinn.
Prolegomena to musical criticism	Dr. Percy C. Buck.

On December 23, 1806, Beethoven's Violin concerto was first publicly performed. This interesting event took place in Vienna at a concert given by Franz Clement, a well-known virtuoso and principal violin at the Theatre an der Wien, of which, strangely enough, no record seems to exist. Sir George Grove says: 'There is evidence to show, what might have been assumed from Beethoven's habit of postponing bespoken works to the last, that it was written in a hurry and Clement played his part without rehearsal at sight.' The autograph score now preserved in the Imperial Library, Vienna, is entitled:

dal L. v. Bthvn, 1806.

The work was published in 1809. Up to the present the actual date of the first performance in England of this glorious work has not been discovered, but that need not affect the tone of the English 'Hurrah' at this centenary of a masterpiece.

Apt quotation seasoneth speech. And how rich the seasoning when Shakespeare is the source. This was made manifest at the recent banquet given to Mr. Joseph Bennett in the entertaining speech made, in response to the toast of Music, by Sir Frederick Bridge, who said: 'What can better describe the effect of the admirable solos played by Herr Kreisler than the words in Much ado about Nothing?'

Benedick.—Now, Divine air! now is his soul ravished! Is it not strange that sheeps' guts should hale souls out of men's bodies.

Again, said Sir Frederick, a notable affectation of some artists is more than hinted at in the words of Sir Andrew Ague-Cheek in Twelfth Night:

O, had I but followed the arts!

With Sir Toby Belch's reply:

Then hadst thou had an excellent head of hair.

And what is more true than the little dialogue between Touchstone and the Pages?

Touchstone.—Come, sit, sit, and a song.

1st Page.—Shall we clap into 't roundly, without hawking, or spitting, or saying we are hoarse; which are the only prologues to a bad voice?

To which question comes the punning answer:

2nd Page.—I'faith, i'faith; and both in tune, like two gypsies on a horse.

After that charming ditty 'It was a lover and his lass' has been sung, the scene is rounded off with another pun, put into the mouth of Touchstone:

Touchstone.—Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no greater matter in the ditty, yet the note was very unteuable.

1st Page.—You are deceived, sir; we kept time, we lost not our time.

Touchstone.—By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God be with you; and God mend your voices!

An illustrated catalogue of the Henry Watson Collection of musical instruments at the Royal Manchester College of Music has just been published by Messrs. Sherratt & Hughes, of Manchester. This valuable collection consists of 155 specimens, classified thus: 22 rhythmical instruments; 52 wind instruments; 67 stringed instruments; and 14 miscellaneous. Mr. Stanley Withers, registrar of the College, contributes a short introduction to this interesting brochure.

Every effort that is put forth to make music more intelligible, and therefore more enjoyable, to children, deserves commendation and encouragement. Our Bristol correspondent briefly records such an effort in progress in the West of England—Clifton, Clevedon and Weston-super-Mare. The desire of the earnest-minded ladies who have devised the scheme is to set before their juvenile audience a carefully-arranged programme of the best music, such as the young listeners can comprehend, and, with the aid of a short introductory 'talk,' to arouse an intelligent interest in and appreciation of the works thus performed. The benefit of such a procedure, not only to pupils but to teachers, is obvious, and one of its interesting features is that each concert is devoted to the music of one particular country, namely English, French, &c.

Next Saturday's Tschaiowsky's '1812' overture will be performed at —

Thus forecasted a London daily newspaper. We are now on the look-out for a similar announcement of 'Last Monday's Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony.'

MR. JOSEPH BENNETT.

In connection with his retirement from the post of music critic on the staff of the Daily Telegraph, which he has held with great distinction for thirty-six years, Mr. Joseph Bennett was entertained at a banquet, under the presidency of Sir Alexander Mackenzie, at the Trocadero Restaurant, Piccadilly, on November 6, when a large company assembled to do honour to the veteran journalist.

Sir Alexander Mackenzie, in proposing the toast of the evening, said:

This occasion is, I believe, unique, inasmuch as there exists no record of any similar public manifestation of esteem—shall I say 'affection'?—on the part of the profession of music towards one of its judges. I approach the toast, and you will doubtless receive it, with the same mingled feelings of regret, gratitude, and admiration. It is the celebration of the completion of a long period of exceptionally useful and exceptionally distinguished work in the service of an Art which our guest has delighted to foster with all his heart and mind, and with which he has so enduringly identified himself. For it is hardly possible for any of us to think of or to speak about musical criticism—and we do, I am told, occasionally refer, very privately, to be sure, to that subject—without immediately connecting it with the name of Joseph Bennett. I ought rather to have said the partial completion; because we are glad to think that we are not here to bid 'farewell' either to himself, his interest or his endeavours in the cause of music. That moment is happily yet deferred—and long may it be in arriving. We have honoured ourselves in bidding him here to accept our congratulations on the successful accomplishment of so many years' strenuous and admirable work, and to hear our cordial wishes and hopes that he may be spared to achieve much more before he elects to lay his pen aside.

After referring to the staunch support which Mr. Bennett had always given to British music, the chairman went on to remark:

Mr. Bennett will not, I hope, think that I am presumptuously abusing the privileges of an old friend and collaborator if I touch upon some of the sterling qualities which at an early stage of his career placed him an 'easy first' in the particular department of his choice. I say 'choice' advisedly, because there may be a few here who are unaware that his journalistic work has been by no means confined to the subject of music. Very far from that. For instance, I remember very well that one of the very first occasions upon which I met him was on Brighton Downs, when Captain Bennett was commanding his company at a review. Let me confess it. At that time a powerful and prominent musical critic with a drawn sword in his hand was to me a somewhat fearsome apparition. It would be still. The association of ideas is much too suggestive to be quite comfortable, and I hardly knew whether to respect him—to use a mild word—more as a soldier or as a censor. I mention the incident because in those days military tactics and the Volunteer movement were among his special subjects. During his long and valuable services as a member of the staff of the Daily Telegraph—a period of no less than thirty-six years—Mr. Bennett, except, perhaps, acting as a war correspondent, has dealt with every conceivable subject (besides music), including Parliamentary reports. I believe he holds the record for attendance at Musical Festivals, for he has, shall I say, 'survived' over one hundred of them. He has been, among other things, one of the most sympathetic of—as the journalistic phrase runs—undertakers. One almost envies those who have been fortunate enough to have had their funerals described by him. There are the touching and graphic records of the Irish Famine in 1880-81 to point to. And to come to more recent times, do we not remember that splendidly-descriptive series of articles on 'Palestine' when he visited the East in 1899? They are still fresh in my memory. Or need I remind you of the many well-known and excellent libretti for oratorios, cantatas, and operas in which he has collaborated with our composers and met them halfway with his own word-music. I have the name of a cantata-book on my grateful tongue which I think has yet to find its equal. It is the rare combination of a very wide knowledge and experience of every branch of the musical art with poetic gifts and imaginative powers which has lifted his journalistic efforts far beyond the sphere of mere criticism, and given to them that literary value which we all recognize and prize so highly.

His attachment to music has been that of a real and devout lover. To him it is not a mere amusement to be treated lightly or trifled with, but an important and sacred art. It is always with him—that I know—and he expects a like devotion in those who profess to follow it. For he has scant sympathy for either the eccentric or the flippant. The serious attitude and disposition towards our art has undeviatingly pointed the ways, and served as a beautiful and beneficial example for many years past. And we shall be all the better for it if, at not too distant intervals, we are still permitted—I know he will forgive me the simile—to hear the growl of the old lion occasionally.

In conclusion, Sir Alexander Mackenzie said :

My own connection with our guest has been an intimate and close one for over twenty-four years. But I have not ventured to say all this on my own account, or even in the name of this very representative company solely, but on behalf of a much larger body of musicians and amateurs than can possibly be gathered together under one roof. They are spread too widely apart for that ; for his name and influence, extending as they do all over our country, have been, perhaps, farther-reaching than he himself can guess or his modesty may allow him to imagine. It is in the sincerest spirit that I now ask you to honour the toast of the health and welfare of our friend Mr. Joseph Bennett. May he long be spared to enjoy his well-earned retirement from at least—for we cannot let him go yet—the more exacting duties of his calling. He surely carries with him the deep thanks and most cordial wishes of the world of art which he has served so ably, nobly, and devotedly.

Mr. Joseph Bennett, on rising to respond, was most cordially received. His remarks touched various chords—pathetic, humorous, and reminiscent. He began by saying :

In each man's life there were some supreme moments. Just now he was going through one of those moments. It amazed him that this splendid company, gathered from the provinces and the metropolis, ladies and gentlemen of all grades in the ranks of society, should be assembled to do honour to the most modest of men. He said that without boasting. He did not boast. He had no idea of such a meeting as this. He thought that when the time came he should quietly retire, as he had known others more gifted than he retire, into the background, and in course of time be forgotten. He did not pretend to understand it, and he did not understand it. But they had willed it otherwise, and he bowed to their decision. All he knew was that during the course of his long career as a musical critic he had endeavoured to be honest, to be plain, to be simple, to speak out for the cause of the art which he loved. He was also bound to say that when it seemed to him necessary 'to draw tears' he had drawn them, but he had done it in the same spirit that in the old days used to bring the surgeon to the bedside to draw blood from the patient in the belief that he was doing right. So he had thought he was doing right. Now that he had retired from the active ranks of musical journalism he was a kind of free-shooter, and picked off from time to time those who by chance came in his way. He did it strictly in the style of the patriot who killed as many as he could and loved those he killed. It was impossible to keep paths out, and the fact that that was the last occasion after forty-one years on which he could stand in such a position as that, and speaking as a retiring man, reminded him of what had been very happily said, that 'by the side of the spirit of laughter you always find the angel of tears.' That was the feeling with him at that moment. He wanted to remind them that during that long term of forty-one years many changes had taken place. He had seen, mixed up intimately as he had been during the long period with music of all kinds, music in the provinces, music in the metropolis, music even on the Continent and in America. Forty-one years ago musical critics were a light-hearted lot, and who was entitled to be light-hearted if they were not? Who were more entitled to a little enjoyment, after running from concert to concert and opera to opera, then back to the office to write up to one o'clock in the morning, after that home and to bed, and then to get up in the morning and go at it again? Those who went through such an ordeal for a number of years were entitled to such a consolation.

In recalling some of the humorous incidents of his early days as a music critic—the 'What larks!' period (about 1865), Mr. Bennett quoted the Limerick written at the time against his friend Mr. J. W. Davison, the music critic of The Times and one of the 'What Larks!' party of forty years ago :

There was a J. W. D.
Who thought a composer to be :
But his muse would not budge,
So he set up as judge
Over better composers than he.

That was how they used to spend the Festival time forty-one years ago. He recollected at one festival at Norwich getting up at four o'clock every morning in the week and, save for necessary time spent in St. Andrew's Hall, writing the whole day for five newspapers, including the Norwich Mercury, which took in copy by the acre! It was astonishing what human nature could do when it was put to it. What a change had come about since that time. Now they could always tell a musical critic when they saw him in the street. He came along with a blank look and a notebook, and rushed from one place to another, and worked at such a rate that the uninitiated could not understand. Happy people! They had never been musical critics. Let them please think of critics with tenderness; remember what they had to do, and how difficult it was to do it, and remember also how sure they were to be assailed by somebody or by several somebodies that tears were running and sometimes smiles.

With regard to the future of music he was not in the least anxious. He was one of those obstinate optimists who never gave up hope and faith, and never should. He was very sure that with music, through all the changes it had to pass between the shadows in which it was now enwrapped and the great age which would swallow up all disturbances, all would be well. His reading of musical history, and his experience of musical doings during the last fifty years—for that really was the measure of his experience—convinced him that all was well, that music, however much it might be distracted and thrown aside by passing events, would eventually steady itself and take from all that came to it what was good and send the rest streaming down the flood. That was his last word on the subject of music. It remained only for him to briefly repeat his sincere thanks for the great honour they had done him. He could hardly find words adequate to the performance of that task, and perhaps they would excuse him attempting to say more, because he should only make a miserable failure. As a last word he would only say that he should remember that evening and all that pertained to it till the time came when in the real and conclusive sense he lay him down and took his rest.

The Lord Chief Justice (Lord Alverstone) proposed the toast of Music, to which Sir Frederick Bridge responded in one of his witty and enjoyable speeches; and the guests were charmed with the musical selections so admirably interpreted by a trio of excellent artists—Miss Fanny Davies (pianoforte), Herr Fritz Kreisler (violin), and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, who gave a capital rendering of Rossini's 'Largo al factotum.' The arrangements of the banquet were undertaken by the Concert-Goers' Club with the co-operation of a special and representative committee.

On October 31, at the Imperial Restaurant, Mr. Joseph Bennett was privately entertained at dinner by his brother music critics, when a signet ring, subscribed for by those present, was presented to the guest of the evening by Mr. J. Hugh Thomson. At this interesting function the chair was taken by Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland.

SIR CHARLES STANFORD ON MUSIC PUBLISHING.

The dinner given on November 18 at the Hotel Cecil, the Duke of Argyll in the chair, to Mr. T. P. O'Connor, M.P., in recognition of his untiring efforts in connection with the passing of the Musical Copyright Bill, now the Act, of 1906, was of a distinctly harmonious character, as everyone expected it would be. There was, however, one discordant note. It was sounded in the speech of Sir Charles Stanford, in replying to the toast of 'Music.' As a fact, the speaker practically avoided music per se, but, in expressing his gratitude to the guest of the evening and those associated with him for the part they had taken in the suppression of the music pirate, he said :

They have safeguarded property and the commercial honour of the country; they have warded off the danger which threatened that hardly-won cause, international copyright; and they have secured the safety of those works which produce the quickest returns and the largest profits, and so once more have raised the hope that some small proportion of those profits may be devoted to the publishing of music which appeals to a smaller but an earnest circle of music lovers. And I confess that this hope is uppermost in my mind to-night. I am not alluding to choral music, or to sacred music for the church, two branches of the art which, by force of circumstances, have their abode mainly in this country, and which, being wedded to English words and English customs, can only now and then appeal to other nations. I am alluding to those works of absolute music upon which, as history has shown, the reputation of various nations is based. Symphonies, concertos, and other orchestral works, chamber-music for strings, trios, sonatas for various instruments, important pianoforte music, and classical songs; how do we stand in this respect? I will ask you to look at the record of the two nations of Europe which have made the most conspicuous advance in creative music during the last quarter of a century—Russia and England. In Russia there arose a publisher, whose name deserves to be written in golden letters in the annals of his country and his craft, Belaïeff. He had the foresight to grasp that if Russian music was to gain the reputation it deserved, it must be put within the reach of Europe. This he did, in his native Petersburg and in Leipzig, the centre of the book trade. What is his reward? Russian music has made its way all over the two continents, and it is safe to say that nine-tenths of what has been written is obtainable by anyone. There is practically no orchestral or chamber work of importance which is not to be found in his thick catalogue. How about England? With abundance of the finest material at hand, it is safe to say that at least nine-tenths of it is in manuscript, and procurable by nobody. The reputation of a country cannot be built up on manuscripts. I am well outside the mark if I say that the list of such works published in England would not cover more than four pages. Belaïeff's catalogue runs to 210 pages.

Now who was Belaïeff? An amateur music publisher—a millionaire, in fact, who chose to spend his money for the advancement of his country's music. He was absolutely independent of commercial success, or even failure, and, moreover, he bequeathed a large sum of money in order that his efforts might be continued after his death, not by music publishers, but by the Russian composers Glazounov, Liadov, and Rimsky-Korsakov. Belaïeff, who was a prosperous Russian merchant, no doubt had hopes that his business of music publishing might prove a commercial success, but he had other financial resources at his command, and he had the will to convert his venture into a patriotic or charitable institution at any time if it failed, or proved only partially successful.

Does the Professor suggest that music publishers generally should run their businesses on these lines? It might be possible if some of them had an almost unlimited capital derived from other sources upon which they could draw, upon which they could fall back, and upon which they could retire honourably after having made a success, or a fiasco, of music publishing à la Russe. But that is not the position of a very large proportion of the English music publishers, and, if it were, it is not for the musical profession to revile the publishers merely because they do not feel the necessity of converting their businesses into patriotic or charitable institutions. Some at least of them, have made considerable efforts in that direction. That is to their credit, but an omission to do so is no ground for reflecting on any publisher, or group of publishers. Others, besides publishers, make their living out of music, and they will probably fare better, now that the pirate is by way of being effectually suppressed. Why, then, does Sir Charles Stanford suggest that there is any particular duty imposed upon the publisher exclusively to pull the chestnuts out of the fire which is kindled by the student and fed on manuscripts.

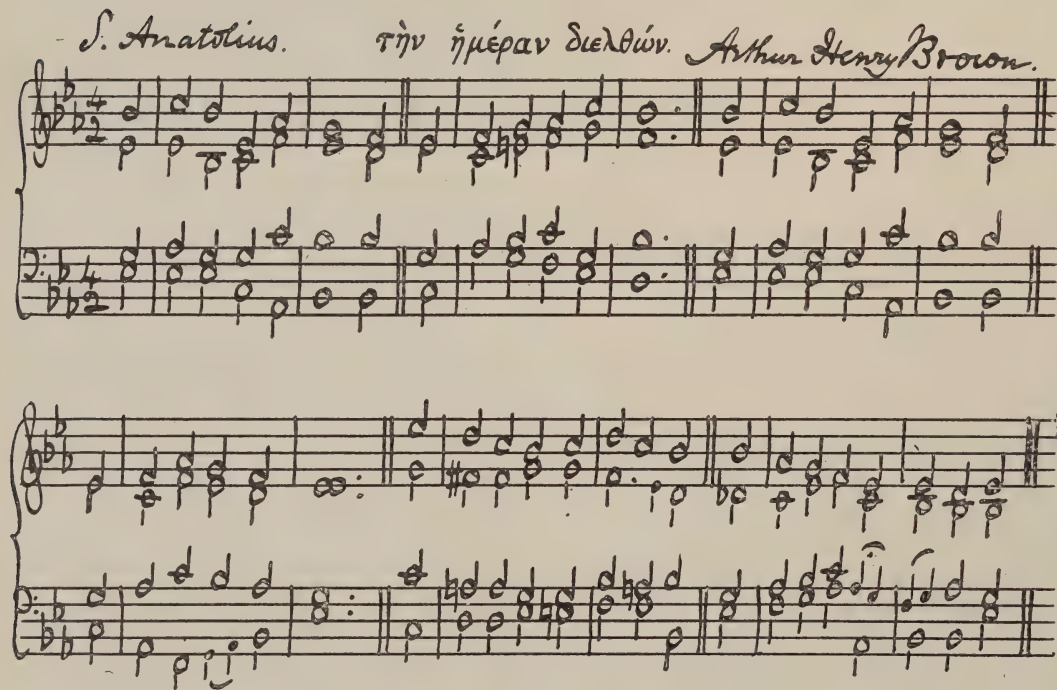

It was not Messrs. Agnew & Sons who built and furnished the Tate Gallery. That was the work of a successful sugar merchant. It was not the yacht builders of Great Britain who built the numerous 'Shamrocks' which failed to 'lift the cup.' That was undertaken by a successful provision merchant. The book publishers do not as a rule establish free libraries. That congenial office they leave to the Carnegies and The Times Book Club.

The remedy for the trouble, which is so upsetting to the learned Professor, rests in the first place with the composers themselves, who must in their work display the genius and aptitude which is necessary to general recognition. Next it rests with the conductors, who must show their appreciation of the composers' efforts by undertaking to perform their works for the fifteenth and twenty-fifth time, and not merely on the occasion of 'The first performance in London' (or 'Mid-London'), and who, when they have shown their pluck, and the triumph of art over advertisement, by performing a work more than once, will also develop the enterprise of purchasing the necessary music instead of insisting upon borrowing it, gratis if possible, and often as a sine qua non! Next it rests with the musical public, who must learn to believe that native music is worth listening to, and to show as much enthusiasm over a symphony by a British composer as they have done over a Russian one by Tchaikovsky.

In conclusion: with reference to the much vaunted catalogue of Belaïeff, it will be found on examination that one half of its 210 pages consists of an alphabetical list of composers whose works are afterwards, in the remaining half, set forth under sectional headings. Of these sectional headings twenty-six pages are devoted to choral music; thirty-eight pages to songs which may or may not be classical; twenty-six pages to pianoforte music, much of it consisting of ballet and other lighter music. This leaves ten pages to chamber music, and fourteen for orchestral works—probable total of actual 'absolute music,' 24 pages, not 210!

Church and Organ Music.

A FAVOURITE EVENING HYMN AND ITS COMPOSER.

FACSIMILE OF THE TUNE 'S. ANATOLIUS' IN THE HANDWRITING OF THE COMPOSER.

'The day is past and over,' one of the most beautiful of evening hymns, is worthy to rank with Ken's 'All praise to Thee, my God, this night,' Keble's 'Sun of my soul, Thou Saviour dear,' and Lyte's 'Abide with me, fast falls the eventide.' Moreover, these four sacred lyrics are among the most precious of the worship-song of all the Churches, irrespective of denomination, and they have become endeared to the hearts of countless worshippers. Unlike the lines of Ken, Keble, and Lyte—three saintly Englishmen—'The day is past and over' is of Greek origin, thus furnishing another instance of the catholicity of our hymnology and its freedom from sectarian bias.

The authorship of the hymn is assigned to St. Anatolius, an old Greek poet. Writing in 1862, its English translator, Dr. Neale, says: 'This little hymn is a great favourite in the Greek Isles. Its peculiar style and evident antiquity may well lead to the belief that it is the work of our present author [St. Anatolius]. It is, to the scattered hamlets of Chios and Mitylene, what Bishop Ken's evening hymn is to the villages of our own land.' This information is supplemented by the Very Rev. S. G. Hatherley, Mus. Bac., a well-known authority on music and ecclesiastical matters in the Greek Church, who says: 'The hymn is to be found in the Great After-Supper Service (in Slavonian, Great After-Vespers), and occurs in two widely-separated portions, the first of which (stanzas 1, 2 and 3) follows immediately after the well-known Stichoi of the Emmanuel Ode, "For God is with us."'

It is to the Rev. John Mason Neale, D.D. (1818-1866), that we owe the English version of this and many other hymns beloved of the great congregation. 'The day is past and over' first appeared in The Ecclesiastic and Theologian of April, 1853, as a hymn of five stanzas. It naturally found a place in Dr. Neale's excellent collection entitled 'Hymns of the Eastern Church,' published in 1862, with the five stanzas as before, of which the fourth reads:

Lighten mine eyes, O Saviour,
Or sleep in death shall I;
And he, my wakeful tempter,
Triumphantly shall cry:
'He could not make their darkness light,
Nor guard them through the hours of night!'

The omission of the above stanza from most hymnals is fully justified, as it introduces a jarring note into the reposeful tenderness of this versified and very beautiful prayer. In his invaluable 'Dictionary of Hymnology,' the Rev. Canon Julian says: 'His [Dr. Neale's] Greek hymns are indeed adaptations rather than translations; but, besides their intrinsic beauty, they at any rate give some idea of what the Greek hymn-writers were.' Who will question the wisdom of the devout translator in thus seeking to set forth, in the English version, the spirit, rather than the letter, of the lyrics with which he has enriched English hymnology?

As we have already stated, Dr. Neale's collection of 'Hymns of the Eastern Church' first appeared in 1862, and the book was reviewed in The Union of February 7, 1862. (The Union was an ecclesiastical journal which, oddly enough, at the British Museum is bound up with The Racing Times!) In that review the hymn 'The day is past and over' is quoted in full with this comment: 'Here is a prize for the next hymn-book which makes its appearance.' These words caught the eye of a certain organist at Brentwood, who then read the words of the hymn—but we will let the said organist, Mr. A. H. Brown, tell the story in his own words, as related to the present writer specially for this article. Mr. Brown says:

'My tune St. Anatolius, to "The day is past and over," was composed on February 7, 1862, immediately after reading the hymn in The Union newspaper of that date, reviewing Dr. Neale's "Hymns of the Eastern Church," whence it is taken. The words delighted me so highly that the tune seemed to flow forth with the greatest ease in a few minutes. I had the like experience with "Draw nigh and take the Body of the Lord"—my tune Lammas (A. & M., old edition, No. 313) and "Come ye faithful, raise the strain"—tune St. John Damascene (No. 133), being written in a quarter of an hour. Many of the best pieces in my "Century of Hymn Tunes" were composed as quickly.

'After writing St. Anatolius I put it aside for several months and forgot all about it until one day, when looking for something else, I came upon the MS., and then it struck me that the tune was worth printing. Accordingly I issued it with several other tunes, some of which have become very popular, and a second edition was soon called for.'

This eight-page publication, containing nine tunes, appeared in November, 1862, bearing the following title:

The Day is Past and Over:

OF CANTERBURY,

AND 78, NEW BOND STREET.

The tune in its original form had a long note at the beginning of each line, and its fifth line was harmonized thus:

(In the first edition of 'Church Hymns,' issued in 1874, the E natural in chord 5 was omitted.)

Few will deny that the current version is an improvement. Beyond this no change has been made either in harmony or melody; the Amen, however, was originally:

MR. ARTHUR HENRY BROWN.

(Photographed specially for THE MUSICAL TIMES by Messrs. Russell & Sons, Baker Street.)

The inclusion of Mr. Brown's 'St. Anatolius'—with line 5 and the Amen as above, also the five stanzas of the hymn—in the Appendix to 'Hymns Ancient and Modern' (published December, 1868) gave the tune wide publicity, and scarcely any subsequent hymnals have failed to be enriched with this devotional and sweet-attuned strain.

Mr. Arthur Henry Brown, composer of the tune 'St. Anatolius,' was born on July 24, 1830, at Brentwood, Essex, where—except a residence at Tunbridge Wells for six months in 1875—he has lived all his long life of seventy-six years. With the exception of a few organ lessons, from George Cooper, he is a self-taught musician. Before he had reached the age of eleven he became organist of Brentwood Parish Church, an appointment he held for forty years, though not quite consecutively, that long period of service being broken by the sojourn at Tunbridge Wells aforesaid, and the organistship, for five years, of the parish church at the neighbouring town of Romford. The tune 'Purleigh,' to 'O Love Divine, how sweet thou art,' was written on a piece of waste paper—the best he could lay his hands on at the moment—in Romford Church one Sunday morning before the bells were rung, and it was frequently used afterwards in the services there, long before the publication of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern.' This tune has become widely popular both in England and America. Organs are so adequate—sometimes over-adequate—in these days that it seems strange to learn that Mr. Brown did not have a two-manual organ to play upon until he was thirty-three years of age, i.e., until the year 1863! For many years the organ at Brentwood Parish Church had five stops and no pedals!

Throughout his long and industrious life Mr. Brown has devoted his best energies to the services of the church. He tells us: 'I have composed 603 hymn-tunes and 178 carols for Christmas and other seasons, some of which—especially "When Christ was born of Mary free"—have attained great popularity, and have been translated into Welsh and Zulu.' As to the wide popularity of his hymn-tunes and carols, Mr. Brown remarks: 'A lady in Cumberland, writing to me about my hymn-tunes, says, "Your tunes ask to be sung," and only a few days ago an organist in the west of England wrote, "Whenever I hear your Carols I feel to want to put on my great coat and snow boots."'

The long list of Mr. Brown's compositions and arrangements shows that he has not restricted his creativeness to hymn-tunes and carols. As an ardent Gregorianist he has written no fewer than 1,377 variants of harmony in his 'Organ Harmonies for the Psalm Tones.' Some—and the emphasis is necessary—of the 603 hymn-tunes he has composed are contained in 'A Century of Hymn-tunes' (1882.) To the above must be added 'The Prayer Book Noted' (two vols.); 'The Anglican Psalter and Canticles'; 'Short phrases for Church Organists' (two books); 'Missa Seraphica,' 'Missa Gloriosa,' 'Missa Coelestis,' 'Missa quinti toni'; 'Services of Sacred Song'; 'The First Miracle' (a sacred cantata); Intros; Services; Anthems, &c. As a member of the Committee of the London Gregorian Association, his special knowledge of the subject of Gregorian music has been most useful and valuable in preparing and editing the Service Book for the annual festival held at St. Paul's Cathedral.

Alert in mind, in the full possession of all his faculties, and active in body, it is difficult to realize that Mr. Brown has well passed the Psalmist's limit of age. A capital walker, an enthusiastic bicyclist, he proves that open-air exercise combined with plain living and high thinking are splendid assets in old age. Music is not his only mental fare. The old poets—Chaucer, Langland, Gower, Spenser, Shakespeare, Quarles, and others—are familiar to him as household words. In fact, for a little entertainment three years ago, he translated the whole of Langland's lengthy poem, 'The Vision of William concerning Piers the Plowman,' and his other pieces, 'Dowel, Dobet, and Dobert,' &c., (8,213 lines), from the old dialect of A.D. 1362, into modern English and annotated it, thus pleasantly occupying the leisure evenings of nearly three winter months. An enthusiastic ecclesiologist and archæologist, he has visited every cathedral in England and Wales, in addition to many in France, Germany, Holland, Belgium, and Italy. His collection of picture post-cards—mostly of churches visited by himself—numbers nearly 1,100, and, mirabile dictu, he has with his own hand made no fewer than 1,000 rubbings of monumental brasses, of which many of the originals have since been lost. These rubbings are so carefully catalogued that any one can be found in a moment, the catalogue being sectionally arranged under name, place, description of person, &c. In conclusion, the composer of 'The day is past and over' is a most congenial companion—one of those men who seem never to grow old because of the sunshine of their daily life.

SAMUEL WESLEY, 'PRINCE OF MUSICIANS AND EMPEROR OF ORGANISTS.'

The article on St. Mary Redcliffe Church, Bristol, which appeared in our November issue, contained references to the organ performances of Samuel Wesley at that church in the year 1829. The information therein given may be supplemented by an extract from the interesting 'Life' of Dr. Edward Hodges, a distinguished organist of Bristol and of New York, written by his daughter, Miss Faustina Hasse Hodges, and published by Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons in 1896. Under the date of October 1, 1829, Dr. Hodges records in his diary:

I proceeded with my brother Archelaus to Redcliffe Church, where we witnessed the really astounding performance of Samuel Wesley upon the noble organ therein. It was the most wonderful I ever heard, more even than I had before been capable of conceiving; the flow of melody, the stream of harmony was so complete, so unbroken, so easy, and yet so highly wrought and so superbly scientific, that I was altogether knocked off my stilts. Before such a man and organist I am less than nothing and vanity. A duet was performed by him and his son, Samuel Sebastian Wesley. The concluding fugue was sublime. A few choruses and songs were interspersed, but I wished them away.

I exchanged a few words with the old man and his son on the performance being over. I walked home afterwards, but my head was full of nought but Samuel Wesley and his seraphic genius. I wrote a paragraph for the Mirror laudatory of Mr. S. W. No words can sound his praises too highly. He is the Prince of Musicians and Emperor of Organists.

JUBILEE OF ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE, TENBURY.

Founded by Sir Frederick Ouseley, Bart., on September 29, 1856, St. Michael's Church and College, so beautifully situated at Tenbury, remains as a living monument to his memory and munificence. The fine organ in the church, where a full cathedral service is sung daily, stands in need of extensive repairs and new mechanism, which will cost about £700. It is proposed to raise this sum by subscription to commemorate the fiftieth anniversary of the Dedication of the Church and College of St. Michael's. As the Warden (the Rev. John Hampton) says: 'It is believed that Sir Frederick Ouseley, had he lived to see the Jubilee of his Foundation, would have welcomed no gift more gladly than the provision of the best and newest appliances to set the organ in perfect order.' Contributions towards this desirable object will be gratefully received by the Rev. the Warden, St. Michael's College, Tenbury.

A successful choral festival was held at Carlisle Cathedral on November 1, in which thirteen choirs, numbering 400 voices, took part. The service-music included Smart's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in G, Sullivan's 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death' (sung unaccompanied), and the chorus 'Be not afraid,' from Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' Mr. Theodore Walrond, assistant-organist of Carlisle Cathedral, was at the organ, and Mr. S. H. Nicholson, acting-organist of the Cathedral, conducted.

A QUAIN OLD ORGAN.

Said to have been made in the time of Cardinal Wolsey by the monks who built Cheshunt Great House, is a funny little organ belonging to the Rev. C. E. Mayo, of St. Mary's Collegiate Church, Port Elizabeth, South Africa. This instrument, now under renovation in Messrs. Walker's factory, consists of one manual and of C compass—CC to C<sub>2</sub>, 4 octaves = 49 notes. The stops are as follows :

Stopped diapason - - - - -	8 feet.
Principal - - - - -	4 „
Sesquialtera (2 ranks) - - - - -	— „
Fifteenth - - - - -	2 „

The keys are of dark wood, probably walnut, the sharps being of solid white ivory, and every pipe of the organ is of wood. The speaking front—of wood pipes with rounded fronts, symmetrically arranged—consists of the Fifteenth ; the casework is of oak. It would be interesting to know if this organ is the identical instrument which is said to have been removed from Waltham Abbey at the dissolution of the monastery in 1540, to Cheshunt Great House (see THE MUSICAL TIMES of September, 1906, p. 598). Unfortunately there is no date on any part of the organ to furnish a clue in this direction.

Sir Frederick Bridge opened a new organ in the large hall of the Ladies' College, Harrogate, on November 14. The instrument, built by Messrs. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Manchester, has been installed in memory of the founder of the school, the late Mr. G. M. Savery, M.A., for twenty years headmaster of Harrogate College for boys. After the recital Sir Frederick Bridge gave a delightful address to the pupils, and spoke in high praise of the musical training that was being given at the College. The proceedings terminated with a pupils' orchestral concert, conducted by Mr. Edgar Haddock.

THE ORGANISTSHIP OF BANGOR CATHEDRAL.

Dr. Roland Rogers is to be congratulated upon his re-appointment to the office of organist and master of the choristers of Bangor Cathedral, in succession to Mr. T. Westlake Morgan, who has resigned that office. Dr. Rogers held the post with distinction for twenty-one years, from 1871 to 1892, when he resigned because he refused to be controlled by the Dean and Chapter as to his private professional engagements. The re-appointment of an organist to a cathedral is not unknown. The most famous instance is that of Dr. John Blow, who, after having held the organistship of Westminster Abbey from 1669 to 1680, made way for his eminent pupil Henry Purcell, at whose death (in 1695) Dr. Blow resumed his duties and faithfully discharged them until his death in 1708. Other instances, though not from the same motives, are as follows, given in the alphabetical order of cathedrals : Bristol, George Coombes, in the 18th century ; Hereford, Thomas Mason, late in the 16th century ; Manchester, William Carter, in the 17th century. Dr. Roland Rogers is the first cathedral organist to be re-appointed since George Coombes, of Bristol, in 1765, a period of 141 years. It should be remembered that, in 1784, the Dean and Chapter of Bangor dismissed William Shrubsole from the organistship of their cathedral for 'frequenting conventicles.' Those eminent divines have long ago been forgotten, but Shrubsole's name has been perpetuated in his hymn-tune 'Miles's Lane' ('All hail the power of Jesu's Name') by its insertion in the hymnals of all denominations.

ROBERT TAUNTON, ORGAN-BUILDER.

In the article in our November issue on St. Mary Redcliffe Church, it was wrongly stated (p. 726) that the name of Robert Taunton is not to be found in books of reference, nor in histories of English organ building. As a matter of fact this 17th century artificer of Bristol is mentioned by Mr. John E. West in his book on 'Cathedral Organists' (p. 83), under Wells. The archives of that cathedral contain, or did contain, articles of agreement between the Dean and Chapter of Wells and Robert Taunton of Bristol, organ maker, to build a fair, well-tuned, usefull and beautifull double organ in the Cathedral at a cost of 800*l.* or less, according to the award of the Surveyor when the work is finished.'

A PURCELL COMMEMORATION.

It was a happy thought of the Dean of Westminster (Dr. Armitage Robinson) to suggest that the anniversary of the death of Henry Purcell—who died November 21, 1695—should be celebrated in Westminster Abbey, of which he was the most distinguished organist. This commemoration took the form of a Purcell anthem sung at every service between November 19 and 25, the selection being as follows :

O God, Thou art my God.
O give thanks unto the Lord.
I will sing unto the Lord.
O Lord, Jehovah, how many are they that vex me.
Thy word is a lantern unto my feet.
O sing unto the Lord.
I was glad.
Rejoice in the Lord alway.

Thou knowest, Lord.
Remember not, Lord.
O all ye people, clap your hands.
Out of the deep.
Let my prayer.
Praise the Lord, O my soul.
I will praise God (from 'Be merciful').

THE FIRE AT SELBY ABBEY AND THE LESSON IT TEACHES.

The disastrous fire which, during the night of October 19-20, so terribly devastated the fine old Abbey Church of Selby, is a sad calamity that has evoked widespread sympathy. The extent of the havoc wrought by the fire may be judged from the fact that the sum of £36,000 will be required to restore the venerable building. An official inquiry as to the cause of the disaster leaves 'no doubt whatever that the fire originated in the organ or its immediate proximity.' The evidence elicited the information that the organ-builders were at work on the organ up till 10.30 on the night of October 19. To quote from the report of the Assessors:

They [the organ-builders] then put out all the gas lights in the Abbey, and removed the wax candles, three in number, which they had been using in the organ. Two of these were then extinguished. They spent about 20 minutes more, partly in the blowing chamber, partly in and about the organ, and then, extinguishing the last candle, they left the church and locked the door. [The italicised word is in the report.]

An hour or two later the venerable pile was a mass of ruins! According to the evidence the organ-builders used naked lights. On this point—and this is where the lesson of the fire comes in—the Assessors say:

They cannot insist too strongly on the need for greater care in the employment of lights within an organ. The evidence in regard to the paraffin-lamp and the fact that candles exposed to draughts were used without any protection in an organ largely constructed of perfectly dry wood are both significant. It is said that organ-builders always use unprotected candles. But a practice is not the less dangerous because it is customary, and if it is dangerous it is reprehensible. It should be added that much greater caution ought to be used in regard to the possession of matches by persons engaged in the building or repair of organs.

In regard to the paraffin-lamp, it was stated in the evidence:

That on a Sunday in August, about 10 a.m., a paraffin lamp was found alight in the organ, standing on one of the pipes. The presumption was that it had been left burning the night before.

The only wonder is that not more churches have been sacrificed to the flames through organ-builders' workmen by their primitive methods of illuminating the dark recesses of the instrument, not only at night, but in the daytime. It is true that the organ-builder at Selby Abbey said that his men used iron candlesticks, but the lights were unprotected. What organist of any experience is not familiar with the usual organ-builder's candlestick?—a piece of flat wood, three nails, and a guttering candle stuck in the triangle formed by the nails! Considering the highly flammable nature of an organ, can anything be more dangerous than such methods, even supposing that all organ-builders' workmen and apprentices are careful? Does not such a practice court disaster? It is to be hoped that all church authorities will learn the lesson taught by the Selby catastrophe and insist upon the employment by organ-builders of only covered lights, and that some responsible person shall see that everything is safe in the building after the workmen have finished those midnight operations which organ-builders seem so much to favour.

A pleasanter aspect of this subject is the zeal with which the restoration of the Abbey Church is being undertaken. Meetings have been held in Yorkshire and in London, subscription lists have been opened and liberally responded to. At a meeting held at the Mansion House, York, it was notified that among the subscriptions received was the following: 'The leading choir boy of Selby Abbey, Willie C. Clowes, journeyed to Castleford on Wednesday and sang at the Parish Tea, and, making a little speech, brought to Selby £1 12s. as a result of his effort on behalf of the Abbey.' Well done, Willie!

St. Peter's Church, in the centre of Manchester, which is being pulled down, contained a fine organ bearing a plate with the following inscription:

This organ, erected by private subscription at a cost of £2,750, and built by Frederick W. Jardine, of this city, under the direction of B. St. J. B. Joule, Esq., honorary organist and chief contributor to the fund, was inaugurated on the first day of May, A.D. 1856. Subsequently it received important additions, and was re-opened on the seventh day of April, A.D. 1872.

The organ has been offered to and accepted by the rector and wardens of the church of St. Bride in one of the suburban parishes of Manchester. Mr. William Goldthorpe, an enthusiastic amateur, and Dr. Henry Watson successively held the post of organist after the death of Mr. B. St. J. B. Joule. These three were not alone in asserting that the finest vox humana stop in the world was in the organ of St. Peter's Church.

The Rev. A. J. M. Green, rector of Halkyn, near Holywell, North Wales, points out that a double chant in E, assigned to Dr. W. P. Probert, who recently died, is the composition of John Barrett, organist of St. David's Cathedral from 1827 to 1851. Mr. Green possesses a manuscript of the chant in the composer's own handwriting, which is headed:

Chant for the 137th Psalm, composed by John Barrett, organist of St. David's Cathedral, February 26th, 1848.

The manuscript was given to his pupil, Mr. Green, by Barrett himself previous to June, 1850. Mr. Green says that the chant has been twice published under the name of Probert, also a pupil of Barrett's, and organist of St. David's Cathedral from 1851 to 1883.

The thirty-third annual festival of the London Church Choir Association was held at St. Paul's Cathedral on November 15. The service included Smart's Magnificat and Nunc dimittis in G, a selection from Bach's church cantata 'O Light everlasting' ('O Ewiges Feuer'), and the chorus, 'O man, look upward,' from Sir Hubert Parry's 'Voces Clamantium,' in addition to hymn-tunes and chants by Sir George Martin, Mr. Charles Macpherson, Dr. Walford Davies, Mr. Alfred Redhead, and others. Sixty choirs took part in the festival, which was conducted by Dr. Walford Davies and accompanied by Mr. F. B. Kiddle, organist of Marylebone Church. Canon Beeching preached the sermon.

At Hatfield Broad Oak Church on October 27 were played Rheinberger's Suite for organ, violin, and violoncello (Op. 149), and a Postlude in D, by Mozart, for harp, violins, violoncello, and organ, in addition to violin and violoncello solos.

The second annual festival of the Sutton, Carshalton and District Gregorian Association was successfully held on November 16 and 17 at St. Barnabas Church, Sutton, under the musical direction of Mr. Robert Hanbury, honorary secretary and organist of the Association.

Mr. Herbert Rolfe, organist of St. Michael at Bowes, N., writes to report the apparent theft of three volumes of organ music, value between £3 and £4, from the open shelves near the organ of the church. His loss may be a warning to other organists to keep their music under lock and key.

Brahms's 'Requiem' will be sung at St. Paul's Cathedral on Tuesday evening, December 4, at 7 p.m., under the direction of Sir George Martin.

PETER CORNELIUS.*

'As I was walking up the steps to Liszt's rooms in the Altenburg, the superstitious idea came over me: even number of steps is lucky, uneven—unlucky. And—oh, dear! there were twenty-one steps.' Thus wrote Cornelius in his diary on March 20, 1852. However, notwithstanding the twenty-one steps, young Peter was spared bad luck. Liszt received him. 'He shook hands with me in a friendly manner,' says Cornelius. 'To portray him now would be difficult; perhaps I may be able to do so when he has "sat to me" in different moods. For the present this much: in meeting artistic notabilities I have rarely met at the same time the corresponding facial expression. Since Mendelssohn, Liszt was perhaps the first and only man whose physiognomy did not clash with the picture which my imagination had drawn.' Soon Cornelius was a frequent and welcome guest in the Altenburg, and became attached to the master and to the Princess Wittgenstein by bonds of sincere friendship. Two days after the above entry, the diary records his meeting Hans von Bülow, Joachim Raff, Joseph Joachim and others of the Weimar group. It is interesting to read that on this occasion Liszt, Joachim and the violoncellist, Bernhard Cossmann played a trio by César Franck, and that Liszt expressed his regret because that gifted composer—some of whose works he had known ten years previously—had produced nothing since then, or, at any rate, that nothing further had come under his notice.

Soon we read of Liszt busying himself with his young protégé's compositions, and, after studying and performing them with his friends, of his advice to Cornelius that he should devote himself chiefly to church music. Hence sundry Masses and a setting of the 'Salvum fac regem' are sent to Vienna, Liegnitz and London with a view to obtaining prizes in certain competitions. Needless to say, poor Peter's compositions secured blanks, not prizes! Yet Liszt repeatedly urged him to continue to compose sacred music. 'You have but to assimilate Palestrina and Bach thoroughly,' he writes on September 4, 1852; then let your heart speak, and you can say with the prophet: "I speak because I believe—and I know that our God lives for ever." In 1853 we find Cornelius living in the Altenburg as the guest and friend of Liszt. 'I still live with Liszt who, from the moment when I first knew him, has never ceased to be the most lovable and helpful of friends, but on the contrary has given me daily greater opportunities to know more and more intimately the noblest heart that ever beat in an artist's breast.' And then he ventures on a prophecy respecting his beloved master's position in the artistic world: 'He offers the spectacle, rare in our day, of a great personality who bears and develops within him the power to become the centre for the artistic aims of the century. At the moment of writing the successes of Wagner and Berlioz—with Liszt the chief representatives of modern art—are clearly established. Only to Liszt's perseverance and fruitful activity can they be ascribed; and in the near future a similar unheard of success may be expected to attend the unprecedented action of an artist who makes the aims of distinguished masters his own, sparing no sacrifice on their behalf—and gathers the different tendencies of the times within the focus of his soul, to let them stream forth again with redoubled force. Who, like Liszt, combines with the will the ability to achieve great things, must conquer, even if the whole world is against him.' How true these prophetic words have become, only the present generation, the contemporaries of Richard Strauss, can realize.

When Hector Berlioz appears upon the scene, we hear for the first time of Peter earning what he calls 'a respectable fee for a modest specimen of my talent.' He had translated the French master's 'Flight into Egypt' (from 'The Childhood of Christ') into German, and 'that good fellow, Berlioz, paid me five shining gold pieces.' It is characteristic of Cornelius that, poor though he was, he sent the whole amount—25 Taler (£3 15s.)—as a present to his mother, just to please the old lady! After this he was frequently employed by Berlioz, and always paid as generously (in Peter's opinion) as he was treated politely by the chivalrous Frenchman. In fact, the two musicians became good friends.

Meanwhile Cornelius had felt that his continued proximity to Liszt was exercising the worst possible influence upon his creative faculties, and there can be little doubt that men of great genius like Liszt and Wagner seem to produce a kind of brain paralysis in less gifted, yet receptive and assimilating mortals. Peter left the luxurious Altenburg and fled into the comparative wilderness of the Thuringian Forest in order 'to find himself again.' There, in the cottage of some relations, he proceeded to compose several collections of songs and translated Rubinstein's opera 'The Siberian hunters,' Berlioz's 'Benvenuto Cellini,' and another section of 'The Childhood of Christ.'

In October, 1854, we find him back in Weimar, working for Liszt and in a decidedly bad temper, because the Princess Wittgenstein, and she a Russian, ventures to criticise his translations of Liszt's articles (written in French) and pulls his well-turned sentences to pieces 'till he fancies he must go mad.' Yet he prides himself because he is apparently the only one amongst the Princess's guests at dinner who has the courage to express his opinions without fear or favour. When the lady opines that Liszt scores better than Berlioz and asks Cornelius, with the sweetest smile in the world: 'Ne trouvez-vous pas?'—his answer is a plain 'No.' 'But I blushed all over,' he writes, 'because I had dared to contradict the dear, great lady in the silk dress. Yet my "No" is more precious to me than all the treasures of the world. . . . Whoever puts the question of my conviction to the test of a simple Yes or No, shall hear Yes or No, as I may think right, even if he is the Emperor of China himself.' Liszt seems to have liked his friend all the better for his candour, though he too had many a tussle with Peter over the latter's translations. It is evident from Liszt's letters that he was not thinking of Cornelius when, on one occasion, he sighed: 'One has often to feel ashamed afterwards of the kind of friends one has been obliged to have.'

When 'The Barber of Bagdad' begins to occupy his mind, Cornelius finds it necessary to leave Weimar once more and retire to his brother-in-law's cottage in the Thuringian Forest, where the merry work slowly ripens. He is somewhat upset because Liszt does not like the subject of the opera, though the master considers the music excellent. As other friends, amongst them distinguished literary authorities, are, however, more than pleased with the libretto, Cornelius hopes for a good result with the public. His descriptions of the first trials of the work in Liszt's rooms are very interesting. He says: 'It is strange how he [Liszt] understands these things, e.g., he took the overture at once exactly as I meant it to be taken, and called it very happily invented. The further we got, the more he became interested, and after the second trial, he expressed himself decidedly convinced and delighted. The Princess Marie (daughter of Princess Wittgenstein) and Miss Anderson (Princess Marie's English governess) congratulated me. The Princess told me Liszt had said that Berlioz might envy me this work. . . . The Shaving minuet created a furor at Liszt's. At first he was astonished, then he grew annoyed because he could not play it right away at sight. Afterwards he was greatly amused; several times he broke out into such fits of laughter that I could scarcely continue my singing.'

How the production of the 'Barber of Bagdad,' on December 15, 1858, was continually interrupted, and the success of the beautiful work before the world made more than doubtful by an organized opposition, is a well-known story. Yet the event was a triumph for poor Cornelius. 'The artists, every one of them, take my part with enthusiasm. Liszt acts towards me in an altogether incomparable manner. . . . The Grand Duke received me yesterday, and was extremely gracious, encouraged me, and prophesied me fame. In the course of the interview Liszt remarked: "Your Royal Highness, Cornelius is a noble fellow" (ein nobler Mensch). The Grand Duke shook hands with me at parting as with a friend.'

After the scandalous treatment of his friend's work Liszt washed his hands of things theatrical in Weimar. His last public appearance took place on December 17, two days after the 'Barber' première and in connection with a festival concert in honour of Beethoven's birthday. Cornelius had written a fine prologue for the occasion, and Liszt conducted Beethoven's 'Weihe des Hauses,' and the A major Symphony, 'with such demoniac force that I scarcely dared look at him. . . . It was a performance such as has never perhaps been heard before.'

With Liszt's retirement from public life in Weimar the raison d'être for Cornelius's presence there had virtually disappeared. He left the place almost immediately, and after a short stay in his native town, Mainz, he arrived on April 12, 1859, in Vienna, where he hoped to make a living as teacher, and to find time and inspiration for the composition of his second opera, 'The Cid.' Vienna held him for five years. The great event of these days was his making the acquaintance of Wagner, who induced him to exchange the Austrian capital for Munich, where Cornelius became teacher at the Conservatorium, at a salary—his first fixed salary—of 1,000 gulden. As was to be expected, the letters dealing with the doings of Wagner and his party, including the young King Ludwig, are amongst the most interesting in the volumes, and exigencies of space only forbid our quoting from them.

The reader who refuses to be frightened by the bulk of these two volumes—so ably edited by the master's son, Herr Carl Maria Cornelius—will not regret the time spent on their perusal. They throw a new light on a remarkable period in Wagner's life, and they are ever filled with the bright spirit of one of the most lovable of men and most cultivated of musicians. They are the best monument to the memory of Peter Cornelius.

Soho has lost one of its old, genial, and interesting inhabitants by the death, which we regret to record, of Mr. FREDERICK JUSTEN, who died at 37, Soho Square on November 20, after a short illness. Born at Bonn in 1832, he came to England in 1851 as an assistant in the well-known foreign book publishing firm of Dulau & Co., and subsequently became sole proprietor of the business. A lover of music, especially of Bach, Mr. Justen was an amateur violinist who enjoyed taking his part in a string quartet.

Reviews.

Old English Organ Music. Edited by John E. West.
[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

The stream from which Mr. West is drawing his supply gives no indication of running dry. Here before us is an instalment of a double quartet of books which well maintain the interest of those which have preceded them. Two pieces by Jonathan Battishill are contrasted, the one a pleasant Andante movement, the other a capital March, not vulgar and all too short. Edward Gibbons and his pupil, Matthew Lock, furnish three 17th century compositions, Gibbons in 'A Prelude upon ye Organ as was then usual before ye Anthem' (the said anthem being Gibbons's 'How hath the city sate solitary'), and Lock in a Voluntary in F major and a Toccata in A minor, both from his 'Melothesia,' published in 1673. That the designation 'Voluntary in D major' is really a prelude and fugue, the subject of the latter being of stately minims in scale progression with a pretty hop to the octave at the end—the whole affording excellent fare to those who play, and keen enjoyment to those who listen to the strains of an 18th century musician.

A trio of slow movements—Thomas Adams, John Bennett, and William Walond being responsible for their paternity—are as melodious as they are churchlike, which is more than can be said of some organ music of the present day. John Bennett's Adagio is from his 'Ten voluntaries for the organ or harpsichord,' to which Handel subscribed. Thomas Attwood is best known by his vocal music, but that the pupil of Mozart could write for the organ is proved by two pieces, the Dirge composed for the funeral service of Lord Nelson in St. Paul's Cathedral on January 9, 1806, and performed by the composer on that occasion, and a Cathedral Fugue, a really fine work, fully justifying the unusual but appropriate title Attwood bestowed on this imposing contribution to organ music. Away back in the 16th century were two composers named Richard Alwood and Robert Redford. The former was 'a priest'—and that is all that is biographically known of him—the latter was organist, almoner, and master of the boys of St. Paul's Cathedral. A voluntary by Alwood and a 'Glorificamus' constitute the two slow movements from No. 24 of this series of 'Old English Organ Music.' From manuscripts in the British Museum Mr. West has transcribed and adapted to the modern organ a couple of pieces by Dr. John Bull—one entitled 'Vexilla regis prodeunt' (part iii.), the other a Fantasia on the Flemish chorale 'Laet ons met Hertem reinje.' Last, but not least, because it is a very welcome number, is an organ concerto in E flat by the Rev. William Felton, well known as the composer of a chant bearing his name. The concerto opens with a maestoso movement—characteristic of the period (the 18th century) in which it was written—to which succeeds an animated fugue, well contrasted in its cheerful strains. Diversity is afforded by an Alla Siciliana in C minor, which leads to a most charming Gavotte, as dainty as dainty can be. This felicitous Feltonian composition should meet with general favour. It only remains to say that the difficult task of editing these pieces has, as heretofore, been discharged by Mr. West in a spirit of reverence for these old masters who have enriched native music by the fruits of their genius.

Musical reminiscences and impressions. By John Francis Barnett. Illustrated.
[Hodder & Stoughton.]

Books of this kind are welcome because they often record incidents and relate anecdotes which might otherwise have been lost. In the course of his long and varied career Mr. Barnett has had many opportunities of meeting with celebrated people in the art of music, from the time when he obtained a King's scholarship at the Royal Academy of Music (in 1851) at the age of thirteen, to the present day of his professorships of the pianoforte at the Royal Academy of Music, the Royal College of Music, and the Guildhall School of Music. During his studentship at the Leipzig Conservatorium his schoolfellows included Edvard Grieg, Carl Rosa, Walter Bache, and Franklin Taylor, and it is not everyone who can say that he played a pianoforte concerto under the conductorship of Spohr, fifty-three years ago. Space will not admit of detailed reference to the reminiscences which Mr. Barnett has recorded in this well illustrated and readable volume. It is amusing to read of the early days of the Guildhall School of Music, when operations were carried on in a disused warehouse in Aldermanbury, and that, owing to the lack of class-rooms, the gentleman who taught the drums gave his lessons in the coal-cellar! One of the best stories in the volume relates to Hans von Bülow: this we venture to give on p. 809.

Mr. Barnett's book contains much information relating to music and musicians in England during the last half-century, and the author's impression of music past and present, together with accounts of his various compositions, including his best known work, 'The ancient mariner,' furnish much that will interest the reader. In view of a possible second edition, the following corrections should be made: p. 274, the year of Wagner's last visit to England is 1877, not 1887, when the composer had been dead four years; and on pp. 314 and 322, the locality of Sir George Grove's 'quaint old house' is given as Lower Norwood instead of Lower Sydenham. The statement on p. 158 that Lindsay Sloper (1826-87) 'was editor of the first musical journal ever started' also needs correction.

The Cathedrals of England and Wales. By T. Francis Bumpus. Third series, with illustrations.
[T. Werner Laurie.]

In this the third instalment of his interesting survey, Mr. Bumpus has worthily set his seal on an undertaking which has justly received warm commendation. The present volume contains descriptions of such important old cathedrals as Lichfield and Gloucester, and the newer foundations of Manchester and Truro, in addition to a quartet of Welsh cathedrals, including a full and very readable account of St. David's, the mother-church placed in that far-away and accessibly-difficult corner of Pembrokeshire. While the main thesis of the author's illuminating discourses is architecture, he seasons his descriptions with many references to music, the material for which he has largely obtained from the valuable library of his brother, Mr. John S. Bumpus. It only remains to be said that this book fully maintains the excellence of its pair of predecessors and that the trio of volumes on the Cathedrals of England and Wales forms a valuable work of reference on the fascinating subject of which it treats and, moreover, adds to the reputation of the author as a competent and enthusiastic ecclesiologist.

Selected choral music for use in schools of the Girls' Public Day School Trust.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

This is a substantial volume containing twenty pieces selected for use in the schools under this great Trust. It is interesting as showing what, in these times of discussion as to the kind of music that should be used in schools, the musical advisers of the Trust think is suitable for study in girls' schools of the secondary class. Eight pieces are for unison singing and are of the folk-song and national type. 'The Golden Vanity' and 'The Arethusa' are among this group, and two other unison songs are Purcell's 'Fairest Isle' and Arne's 'Where the bee sucks.' There are seven two-part songs, including Schumann's choice 'May song,' Mendelssohn's 'O wert thou in the cauld blast,' Handel's brisk and straightforward 'Welcome thou whose deeds conspire' ('Jephtha'), and others by modern composers. There are only two three-part songs—'The gardener' by Brahms, and the naive and charming trio 'The shepherd' by H. Walford Davies. Finally, for the older sections of the schools, there is the classic setting in four parts of 'The Lord is my shepherd' by Schubert. On the whole it may be said that the old and the new and the grave and the gay are pleasantly mingled. String-band parts, easily arranged, are available for all the unison and some of the two-part songs. There are many school bands to whom these will be welcome, especially as the instrumental score is complete in itself and can therefore be used for performance without the vocal parts.

The Bells of England. By J. J. Raven, D.D., F.S.A.
With sixty illustrations.

[Methuen & Co.]

This interesting and informing volume had only been issued two or three weeks before its gifted author had to obey the summons of the great reaper whose name is Death. Thus the book is invested with a pathetic interest, though it needs no such adjunct to strengthen its importance as a valuable book on the bells of this country. From his fourteenth year the Rev. Dr. Raven devoted himself to the study of bells, and the results of his life-long observations, wide reading and personal investigations made him at his death, at the age of seventy-three, the greatest authority on the subject. No wonder that he was in great request as a lecturer on bells and bell-ringing in various parts of the country. His enthusiasm knew no bounds—for instance, his book on the bells of Suffolk (issued in 1890) cost him over forty years of labour.

The present volume, written in a most readable style, is one that cannot fail to prove attractive to all who are interested in campanology. One of the earliest references, and not the only one in the book, is to Burney's 'History of Music.' Later on the music of 'The Fire-Bell Consorte,' composed by old John Jenkins, is given in full, as are also the 'Tennyson' chimes which Sir John Stainer composed for the bells of Freshwater Church in the Isle of Wight. The curious origin of the Cambridge chimes, familiar to Londoners by the tones of Big Ben, is given in detail. Rich indeed is the varied information given in these pages—e.g., that the word 'carillon' is not to be found in Dr. Johnson's dictionary; that the pew system is earlier than the Stuart period; that it required sixty-three men to ring the five bells presented to Canterbury Cathedral by Prior Conrad in the 12th century! and so on—in fact, there is hardly a page from which one cannot fail to learn something of interest. Humour, too, is not absent from Dr. Raven's excellent volume: a specimen of such we give, together with an illustration, in our 'Occasional Notes' (p. 811). In conclusion, we heartily commend this book to our readers: its subject-matter no less than its copious illustrations make the 'Bells of England' just the book for a Christmas present to anyone at all interested in the theme of which it so ably treats.

On Conducting. By Felix Weingartner, translated by Ernest Newman. [Breitkopf & Härtel.]

Weber and Berlioz both wrote eloquently concerning the art of conducting, while later on Wagner published a pamphlet bearing the same title as the one under notice. Herr Weingartner is one of the foremost conductors of the present day, and consequently many of his remarks are interesting and instructive, not to say practical—as, for instance, when he says that a composer 'must not think when he takes a score in hand, "What can I make out of this work?" but, "What has the composer wanted to say in it?"'

Many of his pages are, however, devoted to the weak side of the gifted conductor, Hans von Bülow, his tendency to exaggerate. The German pamphlet appeared in 1896, and the author then found that many 'little Bülows,' as he called them, lacking the genius of the famous Hans, were merely imitating his eccentricities. At the present day, when there are so many gifted conductors, Weingartner's remarks seem rather out-of-date, and, to be frank, some of them, even concerning Bülow himself, rather spiteful.

THE SACKBUT.

At the meeting of the Musical Association held on November 20, the Rev. F. W. Galpin read a paper on 'The sackbut, its evolution and history; illustrated by an instrument of the 16th century, and other specimens.' The lecturer began by saying that many suggestions have been made as to the origin of the name of the instrument, the most generally accepted at the present time being the Spanish Sacar del buche—'exhausting the chest'—alluding to the effort required to blow the sackbut or slide-trombone, for the two instruments are practically identical. This seems puerile. The word Sacabuke in Spain is also used for a form of pump, and this is apparently the earlier application of the word. He suggested that whilst the first part of the word is derived from the Spanish sacar, to draw—the latter part is identical with the Latin buxus, a pipe, originally of boxwood, but in classical times applied to a pipe of any material. This derivation is supported by the Portuguese form Sacabuxo, and the word simply means 'draw-pipe,' alluding either to the pump-piston or to the movement of the slide. Great confusion has been caused by its mistaken identity with the Sambuke, which was a small Asiatic lyre the name of which became in Latin Sambuca. As another word, Sambucus, is the Latin for the elder-tree, and out of its pithy wood pipes were often constructed, the Sambuca was considered by many mediæval writers to be a wind instrument. The so-called illustration of a sackbut or trombone in the Boulogne 9th century Psalter is merely an imaginary instrument, and is called Sambute, the old French form of Sambuke, the Asiatic lyre. There is no reason at present for believing that the slide principle as seen in the trombone was known to the Romans: the specimen said to have been found at Pompeii and given to George III. is not now forthcoming, and was most probably only a specimen of the large Buccina, called in Italy Tromba grande, or Trombone, of which several specimens exist in the National Museum at Naples. The supposed quotation from Apuleius (A.D. 160), given in Grove's Dictionary (s.v. Trombone), is simply a 17th century gloss by Fortunatus Sacchi on what he imagines Apuleius meant: it is not in the original, which speaks only of a form of reed pipe. The Latin phrase Tuba ductilis—applied to the trombone by mediæval writers of late date—does not in the first instance imply a trumpet drawn out by the hand, but a trumpet made of metal drawn out by the hammer as distinct from trumpets of cast metal, of horn, or of wood.

The sackbut first appears in the 14th century, being derived by the folding of the tube and attachment of a slide from the long straight trumpet called Buzine or Boccina. This long metal trumpet was probably introduced from the East during the time of the Crusades, and to it the old Latin name Buccina was given. The 'folding' of the tube was most likely an Italian improvement of the second half of the 13th century—the now familiar shape of the military trumpet being known both in Germany and Spain even in the 16th century as the Italian trumpet. For the slide attachment we may look either to Northern Italy or Southern France—and it must have been added about the year 1300. The earliest representation of the instrument at present known is on an ivory plaque in the National Museum, Florence, being French work of the 14th century. The name appears in France, Spain, the Netherlands, Italy and Germany in the same period. In Germany the old name Buzin was retained, becoming Puzin, Buzaun and Posaune. At the end of the 15th century Hans Neuschel and his family were famous makers and players at Nuremberg. The specimen shown by the lecturer was engraved 'Jörg Neuschel zu NurmB, 1557,' and is the oldest specimen of the trombone in existence known to us. He was the successor of Hans the elder, and made instruments for the Kings of Denmark, Poland, England, and many other great personages.

The sackbut was introduced into England in the reign of Henry VII., and during the 16th century its popularity was maintained by royal favour, the English school of sackbut-playing becoming so famous that continental courts sent to this country for players. Into Scotland it was introduced soon after 1500 by James IV., who had married Henry VII.'s daughter, and many curious entries appear in the treasurer's accounts. The double-slide, which is generally said to have been invented by Halary about 1830, was in use in the 16th century. Zarlino, in his 'Sopplimenti musicali' (1588), is the first writer on music who describes the principle of the trombone, though Virdung (1511) and his copyists give illustrations of it. Prætorius's description (1618) is most minute, and Mersenne (1635) mentions the seven 'positions' of the slide and gives the scale for the first octave. At the close of the 17th century the small discant trombone was introduced. Its use in England first appears in the 'March ed Canzona' for the funeral of Queen Mary, 1695, by Henry Purcell, though the upper part of the March alone could be rendered on the alto instrument. In this composition the trombones are called 'flat trumpets,' probably because they were the only brass instruments which at that time could give the flat 3rd in their scale and so be played in the minor key.

J. S. Bach employed the discant instrument under the name Tromba da Tirarsi, but except in Germany the use of the trombone and sackbut declined very considerably during the 18th century, George III. imported players from Hanover in 1783, but the introduction of the instrument into military bands has tended to vulgarize its tone and to alter its position in orchestral work. Mersenne gives careful and repeated instructions to the sackbut players that they are not to imitate the sounds of the trumpet, but 'to assimilate the tone to the human voice, aiming at a peaceful and not a warlike sound.' For this object the old mouth-pieces were made with a long taper bore very like that of the French horn instead of the short, conical or cup-shaped bores of the present day.

Mr. Galpin advocated a return to the English school of sackbut playing so famous in the 16th century, and the dolce—almost diapason—effects of the old performers. Messrs. Boosey & Co. kindly lent a perfect example of a modern instrument for comparison with Jörg Neuschel's sackbut of 1557. The lecturer also showed from his collection specimens of the straight Chinese trumpet Lapa furnished with a slide (but probably only for portability), a Buzine dated 1460, a discant trombone of the Bach period, and the fantastically shaped Bucin of the early 19th century.

NOTTINGHAM.—The fifth competition festival was held on October 26 and 27. Children sang on the first day, and on the second day nineteen choirs and ten male-voice quartet parties competed. Melton Mowbray (Mr. J. W. Warner) gained the challenge shield for mixed choirs, and the Alfreton Orpheus (Mr. A. Walker) the shield in the male-voice choirs. A feature was the singing of a short selection by the combined choirs under Mr. C. E. Riley. Dr. W. G. McNaught adjudicated.

'THE KINGDOM.'

It is a remarkable testimony to the hold Sir Edward Elgar has on the musical world that his latest great work is already announced for performance by most of the chief choral societies in London and the provinces. The honour of giving the first performance of 'The Kingdom' after its production at Birmingham in October was gained by the Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral Society and its highly capable conductor, Mr. Allen Gill, at the Alexandra Palace on November 17. The pride and enthusiasm of this fine choir of 600 voices were severely tested in the task of preparing a long work in a short time. But Mr. Gill has the precious quality of inspiring his resources to unusual efforts. We hear that so determined were his devoted chorists to rise to the occasion that many of them frequently met privately at one another's residences in order to learn their parts. All this resolution to succeed resulted in a performance of the work that brought the greatest honour and credit to all concerned.

Although 'The Kingdom' is put forth as a continuation of 'The Apostles,' it makes an independent appeal to the mind, and can be deeply if not wholly appreciated without reference to the former work. The notes of joy, serenity and conviction to be found in the well-chosen words glow in the music. The new work is, on the whole, broader and simpler than its forerunner, more especially as regards the choral writing, which flows fluently and often majestically.

The Alexandra Palace concert hall has many advantages for the display of large executive resources, but it can scarcely be claimed that it is an ideal arena for the presentation of the finer orchestral subtleties of 'The Kingdom.' The broad passages were imposing and magnificent, but the delicate mosaics of this and that leitmotif were often inaudible. It is worth noting that this result was owing mainly to what would seem to be a remediable defect in the construction of the orchestral platform. All the greater credit is therefore due to Mr. Gill for the impressive performance he obtained of the instrumental introduction. The beauty of this deeply significant prelude was finely realised, and the minds of the listeners were prepared for the dignity, breadth and dramatic force which characterize the ensuing sections. The chorus sang with considerable unity of attack and often with fine tone.

The soloists were all of the first rank. Miss Gleeson-White took the part of the Blessed Virgin and distinguished herself greatly in the solo 'The sun goeth down,' which is surely one of the finest inspirations of the composer. Miss Edna Thornton was the contralto, and she sang her important part with insight and often with dramatic effect. The wonderfully orchestrated passage to the words 'And suddenly there came from heaven a sound as of the rushing of a mighty wind,' in the Pentecost scene, was especially fine. Mr. John Coates took the part of St. John, and invested it with moving significance by his fervent style of delivery. Mr. Higley was to have taken the part of St. Peter, but he was indisposed. Fortunately Mr. Dalton Baker was able to come in his stead. His fine voice and temperamental style were effectively brought to bear upon the grave and beautiful solo to the words commencing 'I have prayed for thee,' near the end of the Pentecost scene. Here the composer has employed with the greatest felicity all his singular power of vivid expression. The orchestra, led by Mr. George Wilby, included many amateurs, and was fully competent. Mr. G. D. Cunningham was the organist. On the whole the oratorio seemed to make a deep impression on the vast audience assembled.

The Palace committee should look to the organ. Nearly all through the latter part of the concert the distressing noise caused by the escape of wind made it very difficult for performers and auditors to concentrate attention on the music. And was it wise to precede the oratorio by an organ recital which included 'The Ride of the Valkyries'?

BARROW-IN-FURNESS.—The annual competition festival was held very successfully on November 8, 9 and 10. There were thirty-five classes and over 300 entries. The chief choral prizes were awarded as follows: Barrow St. James Ladies (Mrs. Bourne), Lancaster Male-Voice Choir (Mr. R. T. Grosse) for mixed voice choirs; Keighley Vocal Union (Mr. G. S. Day) for madrigal singing and Barrow Madrigal Society (Mrs. Bourne) for part-songs. Dr. Henry Watson and Mr. George Rathbone were the adjudicators.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

It is gratifying to note that, notwithstanding some discouragement by way of public patronage, this alert Society still perseveres with its mission of providing Mid-London with performances of the newest choral works and of other modern works considered to deserve revival. In pursuance of this policy Dr. Walford Davies's cantata 'Everyman' and Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's 'The Bells' ('A poem for orchestra and chorus,' as it is styled), were performed at the Society's first concert of the season at Queen's Hall on October 29. The first-named work was given for the second time by the Society, and familiarity with its atmosphere and peculiar difficulties enabled all concerned to ensure a smooth performance. The work created the usual impression. It is serious to the point of sombreness, but there is also beauty to cheer the listener, and the climaxes of the latter part of the work are stirring. The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Henry Beaumont, Mr. Julien Henry and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies.

Great interest was felt in this the first performance in London of 'The Bells.' Much had been heard of the originality of the work and the peculiarities of the orchestration, which was said to include a concertina. We cannot say whether this noble instrument was used on the present occasion, but we venture to fancy that it will be missed even when it is played. But this is a trifle, for there is plenty else to engage and often to absorb the attention. Mr. Holbrooke is a sort of musical Gustave Doré. His ideas are big and sometimes grotesque, his fancy is exuberant and his technique skilful, albeit both his choral and orchestral writing pay embarrassingly high compliments to the potential abilities of performers. In choosing Edgar Allan Poe's poem for musical setting, Mr. Holbrooke found words that were just fitted to his genius, for unquestionably genius is displayed in this remarkable work. We do not yet profess to understand some of its peculiarities, but we cannot help being fascinated by its weird fancifulness and bold originality. The performance was a fairly good one. The choral colour was hardly vivid enough to realize the designed effect, and the orchestra did not play expressively. This statement of fact is not made in a censorious spirit. Few, if any, societies in the country could give a first-rate presentation of such a work until they had gained familiarity with its difficulties by several performances. We shall hope to hear the London Choral Society perform it again if possible with a larger orchestra, and meantime we have to acknowledge our indebtedness to them for their enterprise in so soon bringing the work before a London audience. Both Dr. Walford Davies and Mr. Holbrooke were present.

The concert was conducted as usual by Mr. Arthur Fagge; the leader of the orchestra was Mr. Henry Lewis, and the organist was Mr. C. H. Kempling.

MISS SMYTH'S 'STRANDRECHT' AT LEIPZIG.

Once more an eminent English composer, one who has won laurels and has gained the necessary experience as an opera writer, has been compelled to seek in Germany the hospitality which it were all in vain to seek at home. Like its predecessor, the beautiful and romantic 'Der Wald,' Miss Smyth's new opera came to a first hearing in Germany, being produced at the Neues Theater at Leipzig on November 11. The title 'Strandrecht' is the equivalent of the original French title 'Les Naufrageurs,' and whenever it is given in English it will no doubt be called 'The Wreckers.' The scene is laid in Cornwall in the 18th century, when the practice of 'wrecking' was held to be compatible with an exceptional degree of religious enthusiasm and adherence to the Methodist form of worship. Even the minister encourages his flock in the practices by which they gain their living. His wife, Thurza, is more compassionate than he, and protests against the hypocrisy that reigns throughout the village. She is, however, untrue to her husband, and has induced her lover, a young fisherman, to light warning fires to keep ships out of danger. The perpetrator of this act of so-called treachery against the welfare of the village is at first not known, and various people are suspected; indeed all is not made clear until a kind of rough-and-ready trial is held in a sea-cavern, in which the guilty pair are finally left to be drowned by the rising tide. The great scene in which they light the fire and watch it glowing, is the climax of the second of the three acts, the invention of which reflects the greatest credit on the librettist, Mr. H. B. Leforestier. For sustained interest, subtle characterization, and mastery of stage effect, very few modern librettos can compare with this, and the composer has risen to every opportunity. The first act contains perhaps rather too long an exposition of the plot, and was received apathetically, but the musical characterization shows real genius, and the great duet roused the whole house to enthusiasm. The splendid prelude to the second act made a deep impression; and at the close of the third act the composer was recalled many times and warmly cheered.

The performance under the new Capellmeister, Herr Hagel, was very carefully prepared, although no very distinguished singers were in the cast. Herr Soomer as the Methodist minister, and Frl. Fladnitzer as the cast-off sweetheart of the young fisherman, realized the ideal of their parts far more thoroughly than was done by Fr. Doenges and Herr Urlus as the lovers, parts which require really great singers to do them justice. A performance is announced to be given shortly at Prague, and when the beautiful work is heard again, it may be hoped that various important passages omitted from the score on the first occasion may be restored.

SOUTHPORT AND ITS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Southport knows exactly how old it is. In 1792, one William Sutton, of Churchtown, by the Ribble—where they dubbed him the 'Old Duke'—went a mile or two westward, into a wilderness of sandhills by the sea, and there built himself a house. People called it 'The Duke's Folly.' Not so many years after the people went themselves amongst the sandhills and repeated the folly. This is the origin of Southport, which itself, growing westward, explains the origin of Birkdale. Since that time the census of one has gone up to some 50,000 souls, to which number you add some 15,000 for Birkdale. At the western end of Southport's broad and beautiful Lord Street, the 'Old Duke' has been honoured with a memorial which marks the spot where William Sutton's 'Folly' stood. And not far from the memorial are the Winter Gardens, in whose theatre, or Albert Hall, the first Southport festival has just been held. I think it may be said that in these gardens, some twenty-five years ago, the outward and public musical history of Southport began, for there the late Mr. William Crowe, with the support of his directors, got together and very capably conducted a really fine band, the emphasis of whose playing served to quicken once for all the pulses of musical life in the town. Along with the band, if not because of it, came the establishment of the Southport and Birkdale Philharmonic Society, with Mr. Henry Hudson as its conductor. The Southport Choral Society followed, under the direction of Mr. J. C. Clarke. Still later, the Southport Amateur Orchestral Society made a beginning, under the conductorship of Mr. R. Aldridge. For ten years the Society existed as a purely amateur organization; but seven years ago the committee decided to extend its services to the cause of good music by establishing a series of subscription concerts, to be given in the handsome Cambridge Hall. For these concerts the Society engaged, and still engages, professional players for all the wood-wind and brass instruments, and the leaders for each department of the strings. The departure was at once successful, and to-day the Society has more subscribers than the hall will accommodate. Mr. R. Aldridge resigned last year, to be succeeded by Mr. W. Rimmer.

About the time at which the Orchestral Society struck out on new lines, the two Southport Competition Choirs—the Vocal Union, conducted by Mr. J. C. Clarke, and the Mixed Voice Choir, conducted by Mr. W. Tattersall—came into existence. What these two choirs have achieved is known in all 'places where they sing.' A little later Mr. Arthur W. Speed, an able and a most enthusiastic amateur, organist of West End Congregational Church, made his choir the nucleus of a vocal society that grew in numbers, and presently ventured upon giving concerts. In 1903, Mr. Speed—whose appreciation of Sir Edward Elgar's genius amounts to an intelligent worship—went further with his choir, and presented interesting performances of 'King Olaf' and the 'Coronation Ode.' From these cantatas to the 'Dream' is a big step, but Mr. Speed was determined to take it. The final result of his energetic efforts was the establishment of the Southport Musical Festivals Association, designed to commence and continue festivals of music on the triennial model, with a performance, as a sort of preliminary canter, of 'The Dream of Gerontius.' With Mr. Speed as chorus-master, the performance of Elgar's work took place in October, 1904. Its success impelled the Committee to push forward with added zest its arrangements for the first of Southport's triennial festivals. The fine fruition of the Committee's labours was reached on October 24, 25 and 26.

To keep together the tags of this brief little historical sketch let me add that in the Autumn of last year a further musical society was organized—the Southport Vocal and Instrumental Festivals Association—which has for its object the promotion, on the now well-recognized lines, of annual competitions in vocal and instrumental music. The initial competition was held in July of the present year. The latest formed of the local choral societies is, I think, the St. Paul's. Under the direction of Mr. Hugh Wood it has already justified its existence. I ask the question here which a prominent member of the Festival Executive asked me—'Who says Southport is not musical?' Who, indeed!

Of the festival itself the programmes really present a self-contained criticism, and I need do little more than furnish them.

The spirited and generous arrangements for the festival, and its really fine achievement, were no doubt greatly promoted by the circumstance that Southport is much affected as a place of residence by the music-favoured merchants and manufacturers of Liverpool and Manchester. Thus it possesses the means, the musical interest, and the coveted area over which the fruitful harvest of festival audiences can be reaped, to supplement artistic with financial success. The list of guarantors was a substantial one. The Mayor of Southport, Mr. C. H. Bibby Hesketh, filled more than nominally the office of president; Mr. Arthur Franceys was chairman of the executive; Mr. W. H. Potts, the honorary general secretary, Mr. George Kirby, the literary secretary, and Mr. Walter Parkinson, registrar, all combine musical ardour with business energy and capacity. Mr. Arthur W. Speed was, of course, chorus-master. To drop into Latin, he was, indeed, the fons et origo of the whole enterprise. His chorus of 200 voices, with the after-touch upon it of Dr. Coward's genius, covered him with praise. Of the orchestra of sixty-seven players, fifty-three were drawn from the London Symphony Orchestra, the remaining fourteen being picked local players. I assume that the Albert Hall was selected for the festival because it holds more people than does the Cambridge Hall; but it was a drawback to performers and performances that its acoustic properties were not good, even with the stage roofed over. Beyond the choir—which I could nowhere seriously challenge, though one or two of Dr. Coward's readings of 'Elijah' are open to question—the feature of the first evening's concert was provided by Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies, whose rendering of the Prophet music deservedly produced a remarkable impression.

Sir Hubert Parry's cantata received an excellent interpretation—excellent, indeed, because the well-knit design of the complete work was not over-emphasised and sacrificed to the ingenious and obvious sequence of humorous points and splashes with which the work abounds. The more serious close of the Ballad was admirably rendered, its freedom of movement and warmth of character being very worthily expressed, and very earnestly caught and appreciated by the audience. Mr. Frederic Cliffe's setting of Kingsley's Ode stood in serviceable contrast with Sir Hubert Parry's work; and Mr. Speed in conducting it justified the compliment the committee paid him. The Nocturne was delightfully played; the ladies' voices very graciously matched the text in the 'Luscious South-wind' section; and band and chorus echoed the earnestness with which, in the final con fuoco, the composer makes his perorating effort at strenuous musical eloquence. The orchestra had triumphs of its own. Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's original and interesting symphonic variations on an African air received an interpretation that palpably gratified the composer almost as much as the applause with which he was honoured—as Sir Hubert Parry had been honoured before him. The orchestral and vocal forces under Sir Edward Elgar's baton—the semi-chorus excellent—soon put him at his ease. Madame Kirkby Lunn sang with appropriate stress of feeling, while the efforts of Mr. John Coates and Mr. Frederic Austin need no eulogy. The whole performance brought to a worthy close a most successful first effort in festival making; and the composer of 'The Dream' was fitly saluted with sustained enthusiasm.

Musical Southport is proud of itself. The programmes of its first festival have paid a compliment to the services which festivals generally have rendered to the cause of music. The festival of 1909 is already taking shape and form. May its programmes render the honour due to native music.

MANCHESTER MILL GIRLS.

In the issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES for June, 1902 (p. 391), attention was called to the remarkable abilities of a choir consisting of girls of the Manchester Girls' Institute. Londoners had an opportunity of judging of the truth of our remarks when, on November 16, under the auspices of the Factory Helpers' Union, twenty-six Lancashire lasses, conducted by Miss Say Ashworth, gave a concert at Morley Hall, George Street, Hanover Square. This choir has taken prizes at Manchester, Blackpool, and Morecambe, and that the awards have been well deserved was patent to those who have ears to hear. The choral singing was remarkable for precision and refinement. Elgar's part-song 'The snow' was most intelligently and delicately rendered, the cheeriness of Weekes's madrigal 'The Nightingale' was realized in a captivating manner, and Brahms's 'A love song,' Schumann's 'Tambourine player,' and a melodious part-song by Dr. Vaughan Williams, entitled 'Sound sleep,' were interpreted with keen perception of their artistic requirements. Several of the girls also sang solos, and it is not too much to say that the concert was a revelation to many in the audience, and a splendid testimony to the power of music in brightening young lives amidst dreary surroundings. Some recitations were kindly contributed by Mr. Pett-Ridge.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The most noteworthy performance at the Royal Academy of Music students' chamber concert at Queen's Hall on November 19 was that of Miss Myra Hess in the Variations from the Sonata in D minor for pianoforte by Mr. Benjamin J. Dale. Special interest attached to this composition, as it was the movement which gained the first-prize last summer, offered by Mr. Mark Hambourg, for a pianoforte concert piece, and it was an open secret that the virtuoso had so altered many passages that Mr. Dale would not appear on the platform at the close of Mr. Hambourg's rendering. Miss Hess proved that the variations as left by the composer are quite satisfactory from a constructive point of view, and are sufficiently brilliant, not to say exacting, to satisfy the majority of professional pianists. If her rendering was somewhat lacking in dramatic force and significance, it was a remarkable performance for so youthful a player. This clever young artist was also heard in association with Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell in his 'Concertante variations on an original Irish air' for pianoforte and violoncello. Mr. O'Donnell's work requires compression, but the writing testifies to appreciation of the capacities of his instrument. Another student who came forward as a composer was Mr. Ambrose Coviello, three songs by whom—severally named 'When passion's trance,' 'To the queen of my heart,' and 'I arise from dreams of thee'—were sympathetically sung by Miss Marie Isabelle Wadia. Mention is also due of an Andante and Allegro for Strings by Miss F. Margaret Bennett, neatly played by the ensemble class conducted by Mr. Frederick Corder. It may be added that the composer is a grand-daughter of the late Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, whose musical spirit would seem to have whispered to her. Miss Caroline Hatchard sang two songs by Liszt with a beauty of voice and expressive power that should secure her welcome in public concert halls. Other students whose names appeared in the programme were Miss Elsie W. Owen (violinist), Miss Nettie Franklin, Miss Edith Kirk, Mr. Thomas Gibbs, and Master Frank Hutchens, the last-named being the executant of Mr. York Bowen's pleasing 'Miniature Suite' for pianoforte.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

It is doubtful if the students of the Royal College of Music have ever given a performance more successful in its entirety than that which took place at the Scala Theatre on November 23. A happier choice than Sir Charles Stanford's 'Shamus O'Brien' could hardly have been made, for the human nature of the story, its romanticism and humour, manifestly appeal strongly to the young people, and the melodious and bright music was well within the vocal capabilities of the singers. Mr. Arthur H. Wynn as Shamus looked every inch a 'broth of a bhoys,' and he sang and acted with admirable perception of the requirements of the part. Mr. Edward G. Mercer was a genial exponent of Father O'Flynn, and the articulation of both these artists was admirably clear and distinct. Miss Maggie Kirkbride gave a sympathetic embodiment of the patriot's wife, Miss Ada M. Thomas greatly distinguished herself by her vivacious impersonation of the coquettish Kitty, and words of praise are due to Mr. Denis Byndon-Ayres as the 'informer,' and to Mr. W. Spencer Thomas as Captain Trevor. The chorus-singing was delightfully fresh in tone and crisp in attack, and the stage management reflected the greatest credit on Mr. Temple. The student orchestra had an easy task, but they performed it with verve and discretion, under the direction of the composer.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The only novelty produced at Covent Garden since our last issue was Signor Umberto Giordano's three-act lyrical drama 'Fédora,' which was played for the first time in England on November 5. Originally produced at Milan in 1898, the work has met with considerable success on the Continent. The libretto, by Signor Auturo Colautti, is based on M. Victorien Sardou's play, rendered famous by Madame Sarah Bernhardt, and, as arranged for operatic purposes, it follows the lines of 'Tosca,' more effort being made to preserve dramatic continuity than to provide opportunities for the composer. The music greatly varies in merit, at times possessing charm and intensifying the dramatic situations, but at others descending to the commonplace. The scene in which Fédora makes her second lover confess that he has murdered her first lover is set in a unique manner, the vocal parts being accompanied by one of the guests, who plays a nocturne on a grand pianoforte, the orchestra being silent; the effect, however, is somewhat distracting, and detracts from, rather than adds to the intensity of the situation. Musically the most satisfactory portion of the opera is the third act. This opens with a mountaineers' chorus, sung by women's voices, the theme of which recurs several times with good effect during the subsequent action. Another motif which is used with dramatic effect is the principal theme of the Trauermarsch from Wagner's 'Götterdämmerung,' which is heard in the orchestra at the references to the impending tragedy. The opera received an excellent interpretation. Signora Giachetti gave a dramatic and sympathetic embodiment of the unhappy Fédora, and as she is scarcely ever off the stage, it may be said that the success of the work was the result of her efforts and abilities. The prima-donna was excellently supported by Signora Caravaglia and Signori Zenatello and Scandiani and a very capable and well-trained company conducted by Signor Mugnone.

The Polish artist, Madame Jeanne Wayda, who made her début at Covent Garden as Nedda in 'I Pagliacci' in the autumn season of 1904, re-appeared on November 14, when she sang for the first time here with conspicuous success as Marguerite in Gounod's 'Faust,' Mr. Percy Pitt conducting with notable ability. Signorina Maria Gay made her début at Covent Garden on November 21, and with conspicuous success, as Carmen. Her reading enchaind attention by its realistic force and consistency, and Miss Gay is probably the most truthful portrayal of the cigarette-girl since Minnie Hauk.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, the Royal Choral Society began its thirty-sixth season on November 1, at the Royal Albert Hall, in an auspicious manner, with the customary performance of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah.' Once more English music-lovers gathered in their thousands and listened with manifest enjoyment to the familiar strains; and again the Kensington choristers gave an impressive interpretation of their part in the work. Miss Agnes Nicholls, who of late has made such marked advance in her art, sang the soprano solos with a devotional feeling and purity of voice that seemed unsurpassable. A remarkably successful début was made by Miss Phyllis Lett, an excellent contralto vocalist and a student at the Royal College of Music, and Mr. Herbert Brown, another new-comer, made a most favourable impression in the rôle of the Prophet. Mr. William Green was the principal tenor, and efficient service was rendered in the double quartet by Miss Edith Patching, Miss Maria Yelland, Mr. Vivian Bennetts and Mr. Graham Smart. Mr. H. L. Balfour presided at the organ with his usual skill.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

It may be taken as a satisfactory sign of the desire to recognize native talent that the Royal Society of Musicians for their annual concert selected a programme by British composers instead of the traditional performance of Handel's 'Messiah'; but although the effort was praiseworthy, it was scarcely judicious in the interests of the funds of the Society, for high-class works by British composers are not yet heard often enough to command large audiences. The occasion was, however, extremely interesting, and those who heard the performances by the London Symphony Orchestra of Mr. Edward German's 'Welsh Rhapsody,' Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'La belle dame sans merci,' Sir Hubert Parry's 'Overture to an unwritten tragedy,' Sir Edward Elgar's overture 'In the south,' and Sir Charles Stanford's 'Irish Rhapsody No. 1,' conducted by their respective composers, must have left the Queen's Hall with brighter hopes for the future of the British School of music. The concert took place on November 16.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

Although no absolute novelties were produced at either of the two symphony concerts given under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood on November 3 and 17, at Queen's Hall, a few lines by way of record are due. It is noteworthy that while we owe to Mr. Wood the introduction of so many works by Richard Strauss, we are also indebted to him for not a few revivals of neglected compositions by Bach and Mozart. At the first concert was played Bach's suite No. 1 in C, for two oboes, bassoons, and strings, consisting of seven movements, to which succeeded Mendelssohn's 'Italian' symphony. Both works were played with an attention to detail and finish that bore witness to careful rehearsal. The soloist, Señor Sarasate, was heard in Lalo's 'Symphonie Espagnole' (Op. 21), a composition with which the Spanish violinist has always been in entire sympathy. The remainder of the programme consisted of Wagner excerpts.

A feature of the second concert was the first appearance in England, as a conductor, of Herr Ernst Boehe, who directed the second performance in this country of his tone-poem, 'Departure and Shipwreck,' from the cycle 'Aus Odysseus' Fahrten.' As this work was criticised on its production at the recent Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, it is only necessary to say now that a second hearing confirmed first impressions. Vivacious interpretation of Smetana's symphonic poem 'Vltava,' and exquisitely finished renderings of Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony, Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, in F, and Brahms's Violin concerto, with Lady Hallé as the soloist, provided an enjoyable afternoon's music.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

A series of ten concerts, conducted by Dr. Hans Richter, was inaugurated at Queen's Hall on November 5. At the second of these, on November 19, the Sheffield Choir co-operated with the Orchestra, in Beethoven's 'Choral' symphony. The occasion was memorable, for the Queen and the Duke of Connaught were present, and the audience was remarkably representative. The Orchestra played superbly; but the honours of the evening were fully shared by the Sheffield Choir, who, besides singing with magnificent volume of tone and precision in the Symphony, gave a rendering (under Dr. Henry Coward's direction) of Bach's mighty motet in eight parts, 'Sing ye to the Lord,'—a remarkable performance that roused the audience to enthusiastic evidence of appreciation. The vocal quartet consisted of Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies.

MR. HERBERT SPALDING'S CONCERTS.

Mr. Herbert Spalding is already known in London as a young violinist of artistic earnestness who has had the advantage of long training and eminent teachers. This was recognized when he came here in 1895, and it has been made still more apparent by his orchestral concerts at Queen's Hall on October 31 and November 13. Mr. Spalding is only eighteen, and has yet to gain his position in the first rank of violinists, but his interpretations of masterpieces for his instrument show that he is on the right road, and that he has the making of a violinist who will honour his art. A commendable feature of the scheme is the inclusion in each of his programmes of a new work by a British composer. At the first concert was introduced a Synphonic Interlude by Mr. Herbert Bedford, inspired by Spenser's 'Faerie Queene,' which proved to be a composition of bright and melodic character, in which chivalry and romanticism are happily blended. At the second concert was heard for the first time a 'Christmas overture,' written six years ago by Mr. Cyril Scott. Christmas is suggested by the carol 'Good King Wenceslas,' treatment of which, with a plentiful supply of chimes form the Introduction and Coda of the work, the middle portion being developed from original themes. Brightly played by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Landon Ronald, the overture so pleased the audience that the composer was called three times to the platform. The programme also contained August Enna's four symphonic pictures entitled 'Märchen' (Fairy-tales), which were played for the first time in England in June last at Birmingham under the same conductor.

THE JOACHIM QUARTET.

The autumn season of the Joachim Committee Concerts (seven in number), which began auspiciously at Queen's Hall on November 21, is to be devoted exclusively to the compositions of Johannes Brahms. The programme on the above occasion consisted of the Pianoforte quartet in A (Op. 26), the Clarinet quintet in B minor (Op. 115), and the Liebeslieder Waltzes (Op. 52, 1st set) for pianoforte duet, with accompaniment, ad libitum, of a vocal quartet. The executants were Dr. Joseph Joachim, Prof. Carl Halir, Mr. Paul Klinger, Prof. Robert Hausmann (string quartet), Prof. Richard Mühlfeld (clarinet), Messrs. Leonard Borwick and Donald Francis Tovey (pianoforte), and the Harford Quartet (vocalists). It is only necessary to add that the afternoon's music afforded great pleasure to a large audience.

At the second concert (Bechstein Hall, November 23) the programme consisted of the Pianoforte quartet in C minor (Op. 60); the Trio in A minor (Op. 114), for pianoforte, clarinet and violoncello; and the Sextet in B flat (Op. 18) for strings. In the last-named work the Berlin players had the invaluable co-operation of Mr. Alfred Gibson (viola) and Mr. Percy Such (violoncello), two English artists of high repute.

The committee have announced with regret that Prof. Emmanuel Wirth, the excellent viola player of the Joachim Quartet, is prevented by illness from appearing at the present series of concerts. Mr. Paul Klinger, professor at the Königliche Hochschule für Musik, Berlin, is taking his place.

CHAMBER CONCERTS.

Miss Bluebell Klean, a native of London, who gave her first chamber concert on November 13, at Bechstein Hall, claims special attention, as the programme consisted almost entirely of her own compositions. The most important of these was a Quintet in C minor for pianoforte and strings, which proved a pleasing and genial work based on melodious themes, which are tersely and clearly developed with admirable perception of effectiveness and contrast. Six songs from the same pen, and some short and bright pianoforte pieces, show considerable originality in their harmonic scheme and avoidance of conventionality, while the songs, severally named 'Open the door,' 'Come to me' and 'The water-sprite,' should find publishers. They were charmingly sung by Miss Esther Palliser, and the pianoforte pieces were expressively played by Miss Johanna Heymann. The Quintet was excellently rendered by the Hans Wessely Quartet, with the composer at the pianoforte.

The Nora Clench Quartet party, at their chamber concert on November 6, at Bechstein Hall, gave the first performance in England of a melodious Serenade quartet in G in one movement, by the late Hugo Wolf.

VOCAL RECITALS.

The most important recent series of vocal recitals were given on October 25 and November 2 and 12 at Bechstein Hall by the American bass, Mr. Ernest Sharpe. At the first of these were brought forward a number of the principal songs of the late Hugo Wolf, who is regarded by some German musicians as a second Schubert. The selections interpreted by Mr. Sharpe indicated distinctive talent when dealing with tragic or reflective poems, but a lack of humour and versatility in those of lighter character. The second recital was devoted to Herr Max Reger, who is credited with being more advanced in his creativeness than Richard Strauss. The majority of the settings were daring in their harmonic scheme, in others some remarkable, what may be termed atmospheric, effects were produced, and now and again the music vivified the text and deepened the significance of the words in a forcible manner. The programme of the third recital was drawn from American composers, amongst whom George W. Chadwick, Edward MacDowell and Charles F. Manney were prominent.

Fröken Theodora Salicath charmed her listeners at Æolian Hall on November 2 by her captivating rendering of songs by Scandinavian composers. Several of these were unknown to Londoners. Specially worthy of mention is a cycle of 'Dyveke's Songs' by P. A. Heise, a Danish composer, who died in 1879.

PIANOFORTE RECITALS.

On November 5 M. Godowsky played some notable little pieces by Scriabine, and some effective arrangements by himself of a Sarabande, Rigaudon, Menuet and Tambourin by Rameau.—Another fine player of the first rank, Herr Buhlig, played at Æolian Hall on November 13 and 20, his programmes being distinguished by a happy combination of old and modern composers, and his readings characterized by insight and earnestness.—Notable advance was shown by Miss Vera Margolies in the same Hall on November 10; Mr. Howard Jones is to be congratulated on the significance and vivacity of his playing on November 12 at Bechstein Hall; and, on October 29, at Steinway Hall, Mr. Virgo Kihl gave further proof of his interpretative gifts in a varied selection of pieces.

At a pianoforte and viola recital given by Mr. York Bowen and Mr. Lionel Tertis on October 30 at Æolian Hall, was played for the first time the first and second movements of a suite for the above-named instruments, composed by Mr. Benjamin J. Dale, which proved so musical in essence as to create a desire to hear the remaining numbers of the work. The programme also contained Mr. York Bowen's clever Sonata No. 1, for viola and pianoforte.

The Dulwich Philharmonic Society opened its eleventh season on November 3, at the Crystal Palace. The programme comprised the Overture and parts 1 and 2 of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha,' vocal pieces by Sullivan and Gounod, and a selection of folk-songs of the sea, under the title of 'The Old Sea Chanties,' arranged for chorus and orchestra by Mr. Arthur Fagge. The soloists were Madame Mary Conly, Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. Julien Henry. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

November 15, 1906.

The opening of the concert season was specially devoted to the memory of our native composer Anton Bruckner, who died ten years ago, whose works have gained so much in reputation, and whose personal friends and pupils are living and working in our midst. Ferdinand Löwe, certainly the most able interpreter of Bruckner's music, commenced this memorial celebration with the Adagio from the seventh Symphony, and ended with a brilliant performance of the eighth Symphony. The latter work was also given by the Philharmonic Orchestra, under the direction of Franz Schalk, who, like Löwe, studied under Bruckner. But at the concerts of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, Schalk conducted Bruckner's D minor Symphony, dedicated to Richard Wagner, and the Mass in F minor, one of his finest works. Finally, the Hofcapella, of which Bruckner was formerly organist, performed his first Mass in D minor. Whereas during Bruckner's lifetime his works were received with one-sided, noisy, ostentatious applause, now their merits are recognized in a quieter spirit, and with that truer understanding which time brings with it.

The conductors at the Philharmonic concerts appeared in turn. Felix Mottl conducted Schumann's C major Symphony and Hans Pfitzner's incidental music to Kleist's drama, 'Kätchen von Heilbronn,' but without creating any deep impression. On the other hand, Schalk had the lucky idea to give Beethoven's great Fugue in B flat (Op. 133), played by the whole string orchestra, a proceeding justified by the peculiar and powerful nature of the work. The same thing had already been done by Bülow when he was conductor of the Meiningen Orchestra, and with extraordinary effect. The performance here was excellent and created much excitement. Schalk was equally successful in Elgar's Variations, and with this orchestra the tone beauties were revealed with all clearness and brilliancy, while in the rendering of Tchaikovsky's F minor Symphony the orchestra literally surpassed itself.

At the Concert Society we heard Handel's Concerto grosso in E minor, an overture by Max Schillings—one of the modern kind named Symphonic Prologue—to 'Edipus Rex' of Sophocles, Beethoven's 'Eroica,' and a Tragic Overture in C minor by Ignaz Brüll, who celebrated here his sixtieth birthday. It was a real pleasure on this occasion to be able once again, and after a long period, to admire Brüll as a pianist in Beethoven's E flat Concerto.

At the Opera we have had a passing novelty, 'The Polish Jew,' by Erlanger. The subject was not fresh, for a few years ago we had an opera of the same name by Weiss, an able Czechish composer. But the music presented to us by the French composer was not new, and so was a failure. A new, pleasing and refined ballet, 'Marionettentreue,' by a young and gifted, though unfortunately blind, composer, Rudolf Braun by name, pleased in spite of the weak action, and it has been accepted as part of the répertoire of the Court Opera. Braun has already won a good reputation by some excellent chamber-music. Gustav Mahler has again distinguished himself as a conductor, by the performance of Hermann Goetz's opera 'The Taming of the Shrew.' The beautiful, sincere music of this work, the wonderfully poetical staging, and the careful study that had been given to the vocal, instrumental, and especially dramatic portions produced unity of the rarest and most elevating kind. With true zeal, the Jubilee Theatre is now cultivating opera, and by its performances of works by Mozart under the direction of its eminent conductor, Alexander von Zemlinsky, has met with marked success. The rendering of 'The Marriage of Figaro' was masterly; 'The Magic flute' and 'Don Juan,' which soon followed, were almost as good.

Two performances of sacred music deserve mention: one, of Beethoven's Mass in C by the Hofcapelle, on account of the excellent interpretation under the direction of Carl Luze, and the other, at St. Charles's Church, of Schumann's remarkable Mass which, being so rarely heard, is therefore little known.

MANDYCZEWSKI.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first of the Queen's College Chamber Concerts was given in the Examination Hall of the College on November 8. Miss Madge Murphy was the violinist, Mr. Herbert Walenn the violoncellist, and Dr. Laurence Walker the pianist. The programme comprised the Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello by Saint-Saëns (Op. 32), Corelli's 'La folia,' for violin, pieces by Massenet and Godard for violoncello and Beethoven's Pianoforte trio (Op. 11). Miss A. C. Kemp sang songs by Marcello, Ponchielli, and Stanford's 'Three Miniatures' (Op. 77). Dr. Walker contributed as his solo Brahms's variations on a theme by Schumann (Op. 9). All these works were performed in a thoroughly artistic manner, and the concert was an excellent opening of what promises to be a successful series.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Of the principal events in November the most important has been the Birmingham Festival Choral Society's rendering of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' which has not been heard in this city since 1897. The performance took place in the Town Hall on November 1, under Dr. Sinclair's conductorship. The choristers were in thorough sympathy with Mendelssohn's music, and infused into their singing the right colour, breadth of tone, and the necessary temperament without exaggeration of sentiment. The voices were bright and ringing in quality, and in attack and ensemble the whole performance gave proof of earnest preparation. The soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Dalton Baker. Mr. C. W. Perkins admirably discharged the duties of organist.

Much interest was vested in the first performance here of Sir Hubert Parry's cantata, 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin,' which the Birmingham Choral Union introduced at its first concert of the season in the Town Hall on November 17, under Mr. Thomas Facer's conductorship. The choir also sang some unaccompanied part-songs by Pinsuti and Barnby with admirable beauty of tone and expression. Mr. Joseph Reed and Mr. Montague Borwell were the soloists.

The Birmingham Choral and Orchestral Association gave a performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding feast' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' under Mr. Joseph H. Adams's conductorship, on November 3. Mr. Edward Arthur sang the beautiful air 'Onaway, awake beloved,' very impressively, while Miss Amy Kendal, Miss Anna Williams, and Mr. Edward Arthur took part in the 'Hymn of Praise.'

We have also had a delightful week of opera at the Theatre Royal, presented by the Moody-Manners Opera Company, and Madame Patti, at the Harrison concert on November 5, was received, as of yore, with brilliant eclat.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Society of Instrumentalists commenced its season with a concert on November 3, at the Victoria Rooms, under the direction of Mr. George Riseley. Mr. Harold Bernard led the band. Miss Mildred Pritchard was the solo pianist, the vocalists being the Misses Katherine and Eveline Gerrish, who were heard with pleasure in songs and duets.

Broadmead Baptist Church Choir, with the assistance of others, gave the annual concert on November 7, when Van Bree's 'St. Cecilia's Day' was given with orchestral accompaniments, the soloist being Miss Eveline Gerrish. Mr. R. C. Young, organist of the church, conducted the performance, which afforded gratification to a large audience.

On November 8, the Clifton Quintet held the first concert of their fifth season at the Victoria Rooms, and excellent performances were given by Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello). Brahms's Pianoforte trio in C (Op. 87) and Schubert's posthumous Quartet in D minor were performed. Miss Gleeson-White was the vocalist.

The Bristol Choral Society opened its season on November 10 with a fine rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' choir and band numbering upwards of 500 performers. Mr. Arthur W. Payne was the leader, and Mr. George Riseley conducted. The soloists were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Wilson Pembroke and Mr. Francis Braun.

On November 14 one of a series of educational concerts for children and young students was given at the Victoria Rooms, where an interesting programme was interpreted in the presence of a large audience. Miss Margaret Lloyd gave an instructive address, and this was followed by a performance in which the following took part:—Mrs. E. T. Daniell (vocalist), Miss Gertrude Wade and Miss Ida Home (violin), Miss May Thomas and Miss Elsie Bennett (pianoforte), Miss Gladys Home (viola), and Miss Rosa Button (violoncello).

The first of a series of orchestral concerts was given at Colston Hall on November 21 by Mr. George Riseley, who conducted fine performances of works interpreted by the London Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Arthur W. Payne as leader. Mr. Harold Bauer was the solo pianist, and Miss Eveline Gerrish and Mr. Santley were the vocalists.

At St. Thomas' Church a series of mid-day organ recitals on Thursdays has been arranged to be given by the following Bristol organists:—Mr. R. T. Morgan (St. Mary Redcliffe), Mr. W. F. Hek (St. John's, Bedminster), Mr. C. Inman (Bushy Park Chapel), Mr. A. Warrell (St. Nicholas), Mr. W. E. Smith (St. Peter's), and Mr. W. A. Lamb (St. Thomas).

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The afternoon chamber music recitals of the Royal Dublin Society commenced on November 5, this and the two subsequent programmes being provided respectively by the London Trio, Mr. Alfred Hollins (in an organ recital), and the Max Mossel Quartet. On November 7 Mr. Vincent O'Brien's choral society gave a miscellaneous choral and orchestral concert including Stanford's 'Phaëdrig Crohoore' and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' in the Round Room, Rotunda. The soloists were Mr. J. F. MacCormack (tenor) and local artists and amateurs.

The Dublin Orchestral Society, conductor Dr. Esposito, gave its fourth concert for the year in the presence of a large audience on November 14. The occasion deserves special notice, as Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony, rarely heard in Dublin, was performed by the Society for the first time. The programme included Humperdick's Vorspiel to 'Hänsel und Gretel,' Saint-Saëns's Prelude to 'Le Déluge,' the ballet-music from the second act of Verdi's 'Aida,' and a very impressive performance of Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' overture. Their Excellencies the Lord Lieutenant and the Countess of Aberdeen honoured the Society with their presence on the occasion.

On October 25 the Royal Irish Academy of Music gave a concert of chamber music at the Antient Concert Rooms. Various members of the chamber music class took part in Gade's Pianoforte trio in F, Beethoven's String quartet in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4), and Rheinberger's Pianoforte quartet in E flat. The performances of the young people reflected much credit upon themselves, no less than upon their professor, Herr Bast.

Miss Nora Thomson gave a violin recital in the Antient Concert Rooms on November 19, when she played Jensen's 'Suite Moderne,' Max Bruch's 'Swedish Dances,' Spohr's 'Gesangsscene,' Beethoven's Romance in F, and one of Brahms's Hungarian dances. Miss Sophie Allen was the accompanist, and Mr. Denis O'Sullivan sang several songs in his usual attractive manner.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Recitals have been so abundant lately that little more than enumeration of them is possible. Of special artistic interest was the pianoforte recital on November 12 of Mr. Paul Della Torre, consisting entirely of Chopin's music, in the selection of which Mr. Della Torre went entirely off the beaten track. A Bach recital, pianoforte and harpsichord, by Madame Wanda Landowska, on November 7, formed the first of this session's Historical Concerts (under Prof. Niecks's direction) in the University Music Class Room, and by reason of the performer's unaffected purity of style and lucidity it proved a musical treat of the highest order. On November 19 the Amateur Orchestral Society provided their friends with a capital feast of music, under the guidance of Mr. T. H. Collinson, and the renderings maintained the best traditions of the Society. Beethoven's fourth Symphony, the 'Midsummer Night's Dream' music, the overtures to 'Anacreon' and the 'Merry Wives of Windsor,' were the chief features of an enjoyable programme, and songs were agreeably contributed by Mr. William Howorth.

The Classical Concerts so long and honourably associated with the name of Mr. Denhof are being continued by Messrs. Methven & Simpson, and a most auspicious start was made on November 17 with a concert by the distinguished brothers Mark, Jan, and Boris Hambourg, assisted by Miss Ida Kopetschny as vocalist and Mr. Benno Scherack as accompanist. Other visitors to our city have been Miss Rosa Olitzka and M. Zacharewitsch, M. de Pachmann, and Messrs. Harold Bauer and Jean Gerardy.

Interesting recitals have also been given by the following local artists: Miss Maie Thom (soprano), Miss Margaret Kennedy (contralto), Miss Marion Richardson (mezzo-soprano), Miss Marion Dalziel (soprano), Miss Belle Thynne (soprano) and Mr. Alfred C. Young (baritone).

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Paisley Philharmonic Society, now conducted by Mr. James Pattinson, made a creditable appearance on October 30 in a programme which included Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, Haydn's 'Clock' symphony, and compositions by Cowen, Gounod, and others. The first concert by Mr. Cullen's Choir, a new organization on the lines of the Glasgow Select Choir, also took place on October 30, and was in all respects most successful. The choir consists of sixteen well-trained vocalists, whose voices blend excellently and whose tone is of very fine quality, and under a conductor of skill and experience it is a choir capable of doing much artistic work.

After a lapse of sixteen years the Hillhead Chamber Music Association has resumed activity, and the first concert of the series (on October 31) was given by the Nora Clench Quartet. The programme embraced works by Haydn and Brahms, and a Trio for strings by Dohnányi, given on this occasion for the first time in Scotland. A feature of the concert was the fine singing of Miss Grainger Kerr. The first two of the chamber concerts organized by the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society were given on November 5 and 12 respectively, when the programme was sustained by the Verbrugghen Quartet, who gave a delightful rendering of quartets by Mozart and Tchaikovsky, and Beethoven's Serenade Trio in D for strings. Miss Allie Cullen, besides acting as accompanist, played with acceptance the pianoforte part in Schumann's Quintet (Op. 44).

The opening concert of the Choral and Orchestral Union's season was given on November 13, when Dr. Cowen and the Scottish Orchestra were welcomed with great heartiness by a large audience. The personnel of the band remains almost unchanged, and Mr. Henri Verbrugghen again occupies the post of first violin. In addition to such well-known numbers as the overture to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' and Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony, the programme included two novelties—Coleridge-Taylor's symphonic variations on an African air, and Sibelius's tone-poem 'Finlandia,' both receiving sympathetic interpretation at the hands of Dr. Cowen. Madame Kirkby Lunn contributed some songs, and gave a highly dramatic rendering of Saint-Saëns's 'La Fiancée du Timbalier.'

Other events worthy of notice have been pianoforte recitals given by Messrs. Matt. Lowson and Alfred Graham; a pianoforte and violin recital by Messrs. Philip Halstead and Horace Fellowes; and a performance of Haydn's 'Creation' by the Barony Parish Church Choir, under Mr. A. Ferguson.

Associated with the Scottish Orchestra, the Choral Union gave a capital performance of Verdi's 'Requiem' on November 20. The singing of the chorus—thanks to Mr. Bradley's care and skill—reached a high level of excellence, and the soloists, Misses Alice Lakin and Agnes Nicholls, and Messrs. Henry Brearley and Frederic Austin, performed their parts with much acceptance. A word of praise is due to the Scottish Orchestra for their finished accompaniments.

In connection with the George Buchanan Quaker Centenary celebrations at the University on November 1, it is interesting to note that music had a place, although not one of the first importance. Buchanan's Latin paraphrases of Psalms 1, 23, and 100 were sung by the choir of Glasgow Cathedral, with Mr. Herbert Walton at the organ, to tunes taken from the collection of Nathan Chytraeus published in 1595. The Rev. Dr. Bell supplied the audience with some concise notes on the celebration music.

The position of organist and choirmaster to the University has been filled by the appointment of Mr. A. M. Henderson, a young Glasgow musician of great promise and ability. In making the appointment the University Court had the guidance of Sir Walter Parratt.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

It is a matter of great gratification to the Gloucester Choral Society that Mr. Joseph Bennett has consented once again to fill the office of president. He made the welcome announcement at the annual meeting, when he delivered a most interesting address on modern musical tendencies and warned local societies against moving, as regards selection of works for performance, in too narrow a circle.

The present is rather a time of preparation than of performance with the several Gloucestershire musical organizations, but there has been great activity amongst the impresarios, Cheltenham being especially favoured by visits from eminent performers.

The free recitals of sacred music in Gloucester Cathedral have been continued, the one given on November 15 being the one hundred and eighty-third since the inception of the movement in 1886.

At a meeting of the Standing Committee of the Stewards for the Gloucester Musical Festival, held on November 17, it was decided to ask Sir Charles Stanford, Mr. Granville Bantock, and Dr. Herbert Brewer to write new works for the meeting of the Three Choirs next September. Sir Hubert Parry expressed a desire that his 'Love that casteth out fear' should be repeated rather than that he should compose a new work for the occasion.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Liverpool Orchestral Society's concert took place on October 27, when Mr. Granville Bantock conducted Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony, Dvorák's symphonic poem 'Heldenlied,' Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain,' and Glinka's 'Russlan and Lioudmilla' overtures. Miss Amy Castles was the vocalist.

Mr. Santley came in for a splendid reception from his fellow-townsmen when he sang at the Sun Hall on November 5. The veteran was in capital voice, and the vigour of his singing of 'To Anthea' was worthy of his best days. Mr. Herbert Morris was the accompanist, and also gave an excellent example of his powers as a solo pianist. The third Philharmonic programme on November 6 included Beethoven's 'Choral' symphony, with Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Fowler Burton as soloists, and Sir Hubert Parry's 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin.' The characteristic music of the latter work was effectively interpreted under Dr. Cowen's direction.

The revival in this city of the Richter concerts, after an interval of two years, has quickened the interest of the public to an unusual extent, and when Dr. Richter took his place at the Philharmonic Hall on November 13 he had an exceedingly warm greeting. The programme included Tchaikovsky's 'Francesca da Rimini' symphonic poem, and Beethoven's C minor Symphony.

At the Symphony Orchestra's second concert, on November 12, Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' overture was performed, Mr. Albert Garcia being the singer of the evening. The Misses McCullagh gave another of their successful concerts on November 19, when they were assisted by Miss Lillie Wormald. The Welsh Choral Union, conductor Mr. Harry Evans, gave a splendid rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' on November 17, Miss Louise Dale, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Charles Tree being the soloists.

The Philharmonic Society's fourth concert on November 20 was devoted almost entirely to orchestral music, the programme including Tchaikovsky's 'Polish' symphony. Madame Clara Butt was the vocalist.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the second of the Hallé concerts, on October 25, the programme included the 'Domestic' symphony, Brahms's variations on Haydn's 'St. Anthony' theme, and Liszt's Rhapsody No. 1 in F. Miss Evangeline Florence was the solo vocalist. The third concert, on November 1, was choral. With Miss Muriel Foster as the soloist, Dr. Richter secured a most impressive interpretation of Brahms's Rhapsody. Orchestra and choir again distinguished themselves in the performance of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' for which the principals were Miss Muriel Foster, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Frederic Austin. At the following concert, on November 8, Señor Sarasate played Mozart's Concerto in A (K. 219), and two of his own lighter compositions, with Bach's 'Chaconne' as an encore. The orchestral selections were Schumann's Symphony in B flat, Dvorák's Symphonic variations on an original theme, and the 'Fidelio' overture. At the concert on November 15, Mr. Carl Fuchs, principal violoncellist of the Orchestra, performed Schumann's Concerto in A minor (Op. 129); but it was by means of the happy piquancy of his execution in connection with Dvorák's Rondo (Op. 94) that he captured his audience. The works for the orchestra were Elgar's 'In the South' and Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' overtures, and the Bach Suite for flute and strings in B minor. The delightful flute playing of Mr. V. L. Needham and his three colleagues in the eighth and last number of the suite—designated 'Badinerie'—achieved for the movement the rare concession of an encore. Mr. John Coates sang the three 'Elizabethan Pastorales' composed for him by Dr. A. Herbert Brewer.

Señor Sarasate was the centre of interest at the afternoon recital of the Gentlemen's Concerts on November 7. Señor Sobrino played very capably several pianoforte solos, and he joined Señor Sarasate in a performance of the 'Kreutzer' sonata. Fröken Theodora Salicath, the vocalist, sang some of her songs in her own native Scandinavian.

The Brodsky Quartet—Dr. Brodsky and Messrs. Briggs, Speelman and Fuchs—commenced their series of six chamber concerts on October 24. The programme contained a quartet by Ottokar Nováček, in E flat (Op. 10), Schubert's posthumous quartet in G, and Beethoven's Trio (Op. 1, No. 1). Mr. Egon Petri joined Dr. Brodsky and Mr. Carl Fuchs in the performance of the Trio. Nováček, who died six years ago at the age of thirty-three, was the viola player in Dr. Brodsky's Quartet Union at Leipzig.

Lady Hallé took part in the second concert of the Quartet, on November 21, receiving the warmest of Manchester welcomes. With Dr. Brodsky she played Spohr's Duet for two violins in D (Op. 67). The quartets, finely played, were Schumann's in F (Op. 41, No. 2), and Beethoven's in B flat (Op. 130). The first of Mr. Max Mayer's chamber concerts was given on November 19, when he had as colleagues Madame Marie Soldat (violin) and Mr. Percy Such (violoncello) in the performance of Grieg's Sonata for pianoforte and violoncello in A minor (Op. 36), Brahms's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in G (Op. 78), and Beethoven's Pianoforte trio in D (Op. 70, No. 1). The last-named was specially well played. Mrs. Max Mayer was the vocalist, three of her songs—in manuscript—being the compositions of the concert giver.

'Samson' was performed at Mr. Brand Lane's second subscription concert on November 10. The choir sang excellently well. The principals were Madame Conly, Miss Alice Lamb, Mr. Herbert Grover, and Mr. Robert Radford. The services of Miss Meta Diestel (vocalist), Mr. Leonard Borwick (pianoforte), Mr. Theodor Spiering (violin) and Mr. Carl Fuchs (violoncello), were available for the opening concert at the Schiller-Anstalt on October 27. Mr. Spiering is a capable executant professionally engaged at Chicago. The three artists gave a remarkably fine rendering of Brahms's Pianoforte trio in C minor.

The second of the Promenade Smoking Concerts, under Mr. S. Speelman's conductorship, took place on November 3. The first part of the programme was occupied with examples of the lighter French school, and the second part was devoted to Wagner. Madame Effie Thomas and Mr. Webster Millar were the vocalists. Edward German's 'Gipsy Suite' had a place in the programme of the following concert, on November 17, when the Tarantella movement was rapturously encored. The brilliant execution of Mr. Josef Greene—he played the first movement of Rubinstein's Pianoforte concerto in D minor and Liszt's Polonaise in E—produced a great impression. Mr. Fowler Burton was the vocalist.

Miss Edith Robinson has organized a Ladies' Quartet with herself as first violin. Her colleagues are Miss Isabel McCullagh, Miss Daisy Jordan and Miss Mary McCullagh. At the first concert on November 2 the programme contained the characteristic quartet by Claude Debussy in G minor (Op. 10), Brahms's Quartet in A minor (Op. 51, No. 2), and Haydn's delightful Quartet in D (Op. 64, No. 5). Mr. Frank Sant-Angelo, an able pianist, brother of Miss Pauline Sant-Angelo, has arranged a series of four semi-classical concerts, which he has christened 'Bohemian.' The first was held on November 12, when Miss Freda Levey (soprano), Mr. Percy Rhodes (tenor) and Mr. Arthur W. Kaye (violin) were colleagues of Mr. Sant-Angelo in interpreting the programme, an interesting item in which was a soprano scena, based on the 'Medea' legend, and composed—and, we understand, written—by Signor Tartaglione, of the Royal Manchester College of Music.

'The Vicar of Wakefield,' a light opera, with pleasant music by Madame Liza Lehmann, came to its first performance at the Prince's Theatre on November 12. The company has been organized by Mr. David Bispham, who, of course, is the Dr. Primrose of the cast.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The only public orchestral concert of the season was held on October 26, when the programme included Beethoven's seventh Symphony and Brahms's variations on a theme by Haydn, nobly performed by the Hallé Orchestra under Dr. Richter. Other items were Weber's 'Euryanthe' and Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain' overtures, and Liszt's 'Les Préludes.' Miss Evangeline Florence was the vocalist.

Mr. Wall and his associates performed Stanford's Pianoforte quintet in D at the Newcastle Musical Society's concert on October 30. At the Classical Concert Society's first meeting on November 12 the programme was devoted to Beethoven and Schumann. Pianoforte trios were played by Madame Marie Fromm, Miss Elsa Wagner, and Mr. Willy Lehmann; but the striking feature of the evening was the impassioned and artistic singing of Fräulein Meta Diestel, who contributed Beethoven's six Gellert songs (Op. 48) and Schumann's song-cycle 'Frauen Liebe und Leben.'

On November 7 the rebuilt Victoria Hall at Sunderland was first devoted to serious art by the performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' and Goring Thomas's 'The Sun-worshippers,' performed by the Sunderland Philharmonic Society. Miss Elsie Foster and Mr. William Green were the soloists. Mr. N. Kilburn conducted, and the Hallé Orchestra supplied the instrumental accompaniments.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society opened its fifty-first season on November 15 with a concert performance of Wagner's 'Flying Dutchman.' Under Mr. Allen Gill's careful training the chorus came off with flying colours; the quality, the attack and finish, as well as the breadth of tone being unusually fine. The same cannot unfortunately be said of the orchestra, but until more opportunity is found for full rehearsal of band and chorus, this must naturally be the result. It is a pity that such an orchestra cannot be got together for at least three full rehearsals. The solos were well rendered by Miss Gleeson-White (Senta), Miss Hedwig Hantke (Mary), Mr. Alfred Heather (Eric), Mr. Samuel Masters (Steersman), Mr. Dan Price (Daland), Mr. Frederic Austin (Dutchman). Under Mr. Gill's direction an excellent performance was rendered.

On November 6, Mr. Rohan Clency gave a violin recital; on November 7, Herr Kreisler's recital was full to overflowing and enthusiastic to a degree; and on November 14 Mr. Maynard Grover gave a pianoforte recital, when he was assisted by Mr. Robert Radford, both of whom received a hearty welcome in their native city.

The Leicester Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert on October 26, when the programme included Beethoven's 'Fidelio' overture, Mozart's G minor Symphony, Jensen's Suite, and German's 'Nell Gwyn' dances. The vocalists were Miss Justina Keightley and Mr. George Pochin; violin solos were contributed by Mr. J. Colin Muston, leader of the Orchestra, and bassoon solos by Mr. J. W. Bird. The Orchestra, of about seventy performers, was ably directed by Mr. J. A. Adcock.

A concert recital of Bizet's 'Carmen' was given by the Leicester Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Sir Herbert Marshall, on November 8. The work was ably conducted by Mr. H. B. Ellis, and the production met with an enthusiastic reception.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The visit of the Moody-Manners Opera Company early in November was notable for a novel form of local co-operation. Hitherto such aid in operatic enterprises has been limited to the provision of committees and guarantees. But the formation, six months ago, of a choral society for the study of grand opera, directed by Mr. J. Duffell, made practical music collaboration possible. Sixty-five members of the new Society were specially rehearsed and 'dressed' by

Mr. Manners, and took part with success in the choral portions of 'Tannhäuser' and 'Lohengrin.' So satisfactory was this new departure that in the following week about fifty of the same party were dispatched to Birmingham with equally good results. The Society has now taken up the study of 'Faust' and 'Aida.'

The Penistone Choral Society is still progressing under Mr. J. Cooper's zealous directorship. In proof thereof an excellent performance of 'Acis and Galatea' was given on November 14.

At an interesting chamber concert, promoted by Miss Hickmott, at the Girls' High School, on November 8, Brahms's Pianoforte trio in C minor (Op. 101) was admirably played by Miss Hickmott, Mr. Ellenberger and Mr. E. Thorpe. Mozart's Pianoforte quartet in G minor and Brahms's String quintet in F (Op. 88) were also included in the programme.

Brahms predominated also at the opening concert of the Sheffield Chamber Music Society on November 20, when Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. Mühlfeld played the duet Sonatas, Op. 120, Nos. 1 and 2, for pianoforte and clarinet. Miss Davies also played Beethoven's Pianoforte sonata in A flat (Op. 110).

A performance of Pattison's 'The wise men' at Glossop Road Baptist Church, under Mr. E. Booth, on November 11, indicated a laudable desire on the part of the choir to go beyond the limitations of ordinary service music.

Berlioz's 'Faust,' performed by the Sheffield Musical Union on November 22, is chorally, exactly suited to the peculiar qualities of Dr. Coward's dauntless choristers. They revelled in the picturesque variety of its numbers depicting peasants, revellers, soldiers, fairies, demons, &c., with realistic dramatic fidelity. The playing of the orchestra was less successful, save in the March and the Ballet music, which were admirably rendered. The soloists were Madame Conly, Mr. Henry Brearley, Mr. Charles Tree and Mr. R. Charlesworth.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

LEEDS.

Music in Yorkshire is rather a long time in getting under way after the summer recess, and it is not till near the end of October that anything occurs deserving of record. On October 24 the Bohemian Chamber Concerts began their eighth season, the programme including quartets by Beethoven (Op. 59, No. 2), Grieg and Haydn, of which very enjoyable performances were given by Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Moxon and Bolton. A striking proof of the success of these unconventional 'smoking concerts' is afforded by the fact that another series on similar lines has been organized by the 'Rasch' Quartet (Messrs. Rasch, Drake, Haigh and Giessing), which opened its first season on November 7 with every prospect of success. During the season it is proposed to give all Beethoven's so-called 'posthumous' quartets, and the first (Op. 127) was the chief feature of this concert. On October 27 the first of the Municipal Concerts, founded by Mr. Fricker, the organist of the Town Hall, was made the occasion of the reception of the Leeds and Sheffield choir that recently visited Germany. Dr. Coward conducted a considerable portion of 'The Dream of Gerontius,' which was sung admirably, but sounded strangely incomplete to the accompaniment of nothing but pianoforte and organ, and a selection from the 'Messiah' and some part-songs were more satisfactory and artistic in effect. The principals were Miss Lillian Dews, Mr. Brearley and Mr. Charlesworth.

The Philharmonic and Subscription series of concerts began on October 31, when the musical public of Leeds were embarrassed by having to choose between the Carl Rosa company's production of 'Fidelio' and the Philharmonic Society's performance of Dvořák's 'Spectre's Bride,' under Sir C. V. Stanford, and Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper' under its composer's direction. The humour of the latter work was well brought out, and it made a very favourable impression. The principals were Madame Ella Russell, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. Francis Braun. The Municipal Orchestra, at its concert on November 10, gave, under Mr. Fricker's direction, very finished and artistic performances of the 'Eroica' symphony, the 'Siegfried Idyll,' and Tchaikovsky's first Suite, which were the chief features of a programme whose only fault was its length. Mr. Arthur Grimshaw conducted his 'Two English melodies,' very artistically adapted for string orchestra. Mr. Arthur Haywood was pianist, and Mr. Fred Taylor vocalist. The Leeds Musical Evenings, which have now attained their majority, afforded a programme of quite unusual interest on November 13, when Mrs. Henry J. Wood, with Mr. Wood at the pianoforte, gave a vocal recital, varied by the highly artistic playing of the gifted young pianist Miss Leginska, and the violinist Mr. Macmillan, both of them finished executants and endowed with a full share of the artistic temperament. It does not say much for the artistic enterprise of Leeds that Sir Hubert Parry's 'Judith' should have had to wait eighteen years before it was introduced to a town supposed to be specially interested in choral music. The omission has, however, been tardily remedied by the performance, excellent in many respects, given on November 14 by the Choral Union. The chorus-singing, under Dr. Coward's conducting, was brilliant and full of zest. Miss Agnes Nicholls gave a really inspired reading of the title-rôle, and the other chief parts were worthily filled by Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. H. Brearley and Mr. Herbert Brown. The Leeds Musical Union, of which Mr. Noel Bell is conductor, gave a concert on November 19, very finished performances of some part-songs by Philip Scharwenka deserving especial mention.

BRADFORD.

The Bradford Festival Choral Society, of which Dr. Cowen is now the conductor, celebrated its Jubilee in November, having been formed in connection with some festivals which were associated with the opening of St. George's Hall, the commodious if not exactly luxurious concert-hall that has served Bradford well for the past fifty years. On October 26 the Society gave 'Elijah,' with Madame Sobrino, Miss Peters, Mr. Saunders and Mr. Herbert Brown as principals, and on November 15 the actual jubilee celebrations took place, Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' being conducted by Dr. J. C. Bridge, who was the Society's conductor 1887-89, and Mr. Frederic Cliffe, a native of the district, who was its organist in 1874-76, conducting his recent Sheffield work, 'Ode to the north-east wind.' As might be expected, an extra amount of zest distinguished the performances, in which the solo parts were taken by Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Mabel Braine, Messrs. William Green, J. R. Singleton and Watkin Mills. The celebration was extended to a concert on November 19, when part-songs appropriate to the occasion, and including a glee by W. Jackson, the first conductor of the Society, were given under the direction of the chorus-master, Mr. H. A. Branscombe. The domestic nature of this part of the celebration was emphasised by the fact that the soloists were all local singers.

On October 20 the Permanent Orchestra resumed its proceedings with a concert the programme of which consisted of English and French music, the composers represented including Elgar, Cowen, German, Bizet and Guilmant, while the interest centred chiefly in a symphonic ballad by Mr. Ernest Blake, entitled 'Far from the madding crowd,' in which a couple of Dorset ballad tunes are made to serve as material and are used with exceptional skill, the construction of this attractive work being most artistic and full of interest. It was very creditably played under Mr. Blake's direction, Mr. Allen Gill conducting the rest of the concert. The subscription concert on November 2 was of orchestral music. A fine performance of Schumann's D minor Symphony was given, under Dr. Richter's direction, by the Hallé Orchestra, and Mr. Backhaus gave a brilliant yet artistic reading of Beethoven's fourth Pianoforte concerto. Miss Esta d'Argo was the vocalist. On November 20 Mr. Herbert Johnson, a young but gifted pianist, gave a recital of a very exacting nature, the programme including Schumann's G minor Sonata and a representative series of Chopin pieces, which he played brilliantly.

OTHER YORKSHIRE TOWNS.

The very flourishing Huddersfield Choral Society had an easy task in Berlioz's 'Faust,' which it gave on October 19, with Madame Conly, Messrs. H. Wilde, J. Browning and Charles Tree as an excellent cast of soloists. Dr. Coward conducted and the chorus-singing was splendid in its colour and force. At the subscription concerts the appearance of Lady Hallé and Mr. Leonard Borwick, with Mr. Plunket Greene as vocalist, on November 20, has been the only event of note. The Halifax Orchestral Society, under Mr. Van Dijk, gave a concert on November 15, the programme of which included a Mozart Symphony and Max Bruch's G minor Violin concerto (Mr. Johan Rasch), as well as an overture, 'Amicitia,' written by Mr. Van Dijk especially for the Society. The Wakefield chamber concert on November 8 was distinguished by a performance of Brahms's F minor Pianoforte quintet by the Saunders string quartet party, with Miss Elsie Hall as pianist. Mr. Quinlan was the vocalist. The Keighley Musical Union, of which an enthusiastic local amateur, Mr. J. B. Summerscales, is conductor, gave Haydn's fresh and genial 'Seasons' on November 20, the principals being Miss Teresa Blamy, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Joseph Lycett.

Hull now boasts of an orchestra, a number of local players having banded together to form the Hull Symphony Orchestra, of which Mr. Wallerstein has been appointed conductor. As most of the members are engaged at local theatres only afternoon concerts are possible, but at the three that have already taken place some creditable performances of interesting works have been given, including Haydn's 'La Chasse' symphony, the 'Unfinished' of Schubert, and Mendelssohn's 'Scotch.' Already the band is improving from its co-operation, and Mendelssohn's work was well played, the chief drawback to the excellence of the performances being that some of the prominent players are not as refined in tone and style as they might be. It is, however, a most interesting venture and promises well in an artistic sense. On November 16 the Hull Harmonic Society gave a good all-round performance of 'Elijah,' with Miss Ethel Wood, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. John Bardley and Mr. Frederic Austin. The chorus was efficient and Mr. Walter Porter conducted with ability.

Foreign Notes.

ANTWERP.

'Ryndwergen' (the Rhine-dwarfs), a new music-drama by a young Belgian composer, M. Auguste de Boeck, was produced here at the Flemish opera.

BERLIN.

The concert of the Lamoureux Orchestra from Paris, on October 21, at the Philharmonic Hall, was a great triumph for the French artists and their able conductor, M. Chevillard. The programme included Berlioz's 'Carnaval Romain' and Schumann's 'Manfred' overtures, Saint-Saëns's 'Danse macabre,' Mozart's G minor Symphony, &c. M. Saint-Saëns and M. Vincent d'Indy were also enthusiastically greeted on their appearance before a Berlin public, the former at the first Philharmonic concert, when he played his fifth Pianoforte concerto, the 'Africa' fantasia, and some smaller pieces; the other at a concert given by the pianist Rudolf Ganz, who played the solo part in the fine 'Symphonie sur un chant montagnard,' for pianoforte and orchestra, which M. d'Indy conducted in masterly style. — The Handel Festival, on October 25-28, has so far been the great event of the Berlin season. Three choirs took part — the Philharmonic, under Prof. Siegfried Ochs, the Hochschule für Musik, under Prof. Joseph Joachim, and the Singakademie, under Prof. Georg Schumann, but not in combination. Each choir was responsible for one concert; the Philharmonic choir performed 'Israel in Egypt,' the Hochschule singers were heard in the 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day,' and the Singakademie in the rarely-given 'Belshazzar.' The fourth concert was devoted to chamber music. The performances were first-rate, especially that of 'Israel,' which created the utmost enthusiasm in a crowded audience. — On October 27, a new concert hall, the Mozartsaal, was opened with a concert in which a newly-formed Mozart orchestra, under the conductorship of Herr Paul Prill, displayed good qualities and greater possibilities in the future in a programme devoted exclusively to Mozart and Beethoven. — In connection with the unveiling of the monument to Albert Lortzing, the Theater des Westens, on October 27, revived a long-lost fairy opera, 'Die drei Rolandsknapen.' The work was originally produced in Leipzig in 1849, since when it remained forgotten till it was brought to a hearing in Bremen early this year. — The new Lortzing monument in the Tiergarten was unveiled on October 28 with the ceremony usual on such occasions. Many artists, musical societies, deputations and others were present, and General-Intendant von Hülsen, representing the Kaiser, placed a wreath on the monument.

CARLSRUHE.

F. Smetana's rarely-heard grand opera, 'Dalibor,' was performed at the Court Theatre on October 30, and well received.

COLOGNE.

Max Reger's new orchestral Serenade (Op. 95) was produced by Generalmusikdirektor Fritz Steinbach at the first Gürzenich concert on October 23, and met with great success. The composer, who was present, declared the performance absolutely perfect. Madame Kirkby-Lunn, of London, sang an air from Mozart's 'Titus,' and contributed songs by Gustav Wolf and Richard Strauss. — At the second Gürzenich concert on November 6 a new symphony by the Hungarian composer Emanuel Móor was produced, and Signor Sgambati's melodious and impressive 'Requiem' was performed for the first time in Germany. Both composers were present to receive the warm congratulations of the audience, and to thank Herr Fritz Steinbach for most excellent performances.

CREFELD.

On October 27 and 28 the Konzertgesellschaft held an In Memoriam Schumann festival. The programme was of more than average interest, because it included such rarely-heard works as the first version of the D minor Symphony (as edited by Franz Wüllner), the beautiful 'Nachtlid' for chorus and orchestra, the Festival overture, with chorus, on the Rheinweinlied, the Spanischer Liederspiel, and the first version for two pianofortes, two violoncellos and horn of the lovely Andante and variations (Op. 46). Of better known works 'Paradise and the Peri,' the Pianoforte concerto, a String quartet (Op. 41, No. 3), and many songs and solo quartets were included. Prof. Th. Müller-Reuter conducted.

DUISBURG.

'Paria,' a new work for soli, chorus and orchestra by Arnold Mendelssohn, words by Goethe, was produced, on October 21, by the Duisburger Gesangverein under Dr. Walter Josephson, and met with great success. The composer, who was present, was many times recalled, while the conductor was also warmly congratulated on an excellent performance of the difficult work.

DÜSSELDORF.

At the first subscription concert of the Städtischer Musikverein, on October 18, a tone-poem entitled 'Liebesfeier,' by Willy Mosbacher, was produced by Prof. Julius Butts, and received with much favour.

ESSEN.

Herr Ernst Boehe's new orchestral poem 'Taormina' was produced at the first subscription concert of the Essener Musik-Verein on October 24, under the direction of the composer. 'Taormina,' it will be remembered, is the name of a town in Sicily, province of Messina, and famous for its Roman ruins as well as for the glorious views toward Ætna and over the sea. Herr Boehe's poem is distinctly a mood-picture, and suggests the poet's thoughts of Taormina's past greatness as well as of the present glories of nature as he views the blue sky, the sea, and the snow-clad volcano. In fact, the piece bears some resemblance in its 'programme' to the slow movement of Richard Strauss's 'Aus Italien' and Elgar's 'In the South.' The work, which lasts thirty minutes, is a worthy successor to the young composer's well-known 'Odysseus' pieces.

HAMBURG.

A cycle of thirty-five operas famous in musical history was recently started with Spontini's 'La Vestale,' of which Wagner thought so highly. The work failed to make an impression, however, and soon will doubtless once more be forgotten.

LEIPZIG.

At the first Gewandhaus Chamber concert a new manuscript Pianoforte quintet in F (Op. 47), by Prof. Georg Schumann, of Berlin, was successfully produced.

Herr Arthur Nikisch has resigned his post as director of studies at the Conservatoire, but will continue as professor of the conducting class.

MANNHEIM.

Richard Strauss's 'Salome' was enthusiastically received at its first performance at the local Court Theatre. A young singer, Fräulein Signe von Rappe, who, it is said, had only once before appeared on a stage, scored a striking success in the most difficult title-rôle, and was hailed a newly-risen star of the first magnitude.

PARIS.

M. Jules Massenet's latest opera, 'Ariane,' was produced at the Grand Opéra on October 31 with the greatest success. The libretto, by M. Catulle Mendès, deals with the story of Theseus and Ariadne, and offers opportunities for dramatic effects of which the gifted composer has availed himself in a masterly manner. In fact, the new work is voted the most dramatic of his numerous operas. The performance, conducted by M. Vidal, was all but perfect, Mesdames Lucienne Bréal as Ariane, Louise Grandjean as Phèdre, and MM. Muratore as Theseus and Delmas as Pirithous having been equal to the composer's every demand.—'Les Armailles,' a two-act dramatic legend by M. Gustave Doré, was produced at the Opéra Comique on November 9, and well received. The work shows decided talent and would doubtless have gained even more admirers, if the 'book' were less gruesome and improbable. The climax is a fight between one of the Armailles, Kobi, and the ghost (!) of his whilom friend, the other Armailles, Hansli, whom Kobi had murdered to gain possession of the heroine, Mädeli. On the same evening M. Jacques Dalcroze's one-act 'Le Bonhomme jadis' was performed for the first time in France. The charming little work had already been given in Germany under the title of 'Onkel Dazumal' ('Uncle once upon a time').

PRAGUE.

At the first of a new series of symphony concerts inaugurated by Dr. Gerhard von Kessler, Elgar's 'In the South' overture was performed and well received.

STUTTGART.

Liszt's oratorio 'Christus' has been performed here for the first time without cuts. Although the concert lasted no less than three and a-half hours, the work made such a deep impression that a second performance is already contemplated. Hofkapellmeister Pohlig conducted.

UTRECHT.

'Hiawatha,' an orchestral suite by Karl Kämpf, was performed on October 31 under the direction of Kapellmeister Hutschenruyter, and so enthusiastically received that it had to be repeated a few days later.

The death is announced in Le Courrier Musical of VLADIMIR WASSILIEWITSCH STASSOV, the Russian musical critic. Born at St. Petersburg in 1824, in 1845 he began to work at the public library, and in 1851 was appointed librarian of the artistic section of that institution. He wrote many notices concerning the composers of the New Russian School, from Glinka—whom Liszt called the 'Prophet-Patriarch' of Russian music—down to Tchaikovsky. With these two composers he was personally acquainted, also with Moussorgsky, César Cui, and Rimsky-Korsakov. He wrote a biography of Borodin, a memoir of Glinka, and a pamphlet 'L'Abbé Santini et sa collection musicale,' published at Florence in 1854. His contributions to musical literature between the years 1847 and 1894 were collected and published in the latter year in three volumes.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

ABERDEEN.—The great and well deserved success which attended the performance of Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' last year induced Mr. William Litster and his excellent colleagues, vocal and instrumental, of the Aberdeen Musical Institute, to repeat their former triumphs, which they did on November 9 at the Music Hall. On this occasion the choral-singing reached a very high standard—phrasing, expression, intonation, and intelligence animating a most commendable interpretation of the music. Hardly less praise is due to the orchestra, while the names of the soloists—Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Montague Borwell—are a sufficient guarantee of their efficiency. Mr. J. M. Riach led the band and Mr. Warren Clemens presided at the organ. Mr. William Litster, who conducted, is again to be congratulated on a performance which reflected great credit on all concerned.

BATH.—The Avon Vale Musical Society were honoured by the presence of Sir Hubert Parry at their annual concert, given in the Assembly Rooms on November 14. The programme included Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' in addition to Sir Hubert Parry's 'The lotos-eaters' and 'Blest pair of sirens.' Both the latter works were conducted by the composer. Miss Gleeson-White was the soprano-soloist, and Mrs. Calverley Bewicke the reciter in 'The lotos-eaters.' After the concert Sir Hubert Parry was presented, on behalf of the members of the Society, with a silver-mounted tortoise-shell paper knife. In the course of a genial little speech acknowledging the gift, he said that nothing could be necessary to recall to his mind the delightful experience he had had that day, or the sympathetic response the performers had made to his baton.

BRIGHTON.—The Brighton Sacred Harmonic Society, at the Dome, on November 22, gave excellent performances of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and Gounod's 'Gallia.' The singing of the choir was most praiseworthy, and the entire concert, under Mr. Robert Taylor's experienced direction, was most enjoyable. Mr. Percy Taylor presided at the organ, and Mr. W. A. Baker led an efficient orchestra.

CHICHESTER.—The orchestral society, which was successfully inaugurated in May last, gave its second concert on November 6, and showed distinct signs of progress. The programme included Gounod's 'Mirella' overture, Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' symphony and 'Capriccio brillante,' and Smetana's 'Prodaná Nevesta' overture. The soloist in the Capriccio was Miss Isabel Hirschfeld, who also played Chopin's Scherzo in C sharp minor. Miss Edith Evans was the vocalist, and Mr. F. J. W. Crowe conducted.

GRAVESEND.—A new romantic opera, 'The mystic bells: or, The land of exaggeration,' composed by David Mackenzie, was produced for the first time by the St. Cecilia Musical Society in the Public Hall, Gravesend, on November 7, under the composer's direction, and met with a hearty reception.

MALVERN.—The first of this season's concerts given under the auspices of the Malvern Concert Club took place in the Assembly Rooms on November 3, Sir Edward Elgar, the Vice-President, being present. The programme was entrusted to the Hanley Cauldon Vocal Society, conducted by Mr. John James, and the charm and finish of their singing was amply demonstrated in a varied selection of part-songs which included Brahms's 'Dirge of Darthula,' Elgar's 'Feasting, I watch,' and Cornelius's 'O death, thou art the tranquil night,' the last-named especially being splendidly sung. Violoncello solos were contributed with much acceptance by Mr. Carl Fuchs, accompanied by Mr. Ivor Atkins.

MELBOURNE (AUSTRALIA).—Mr. Frederic Beard gave an orchestral concert in the Town Hall on October 6. The orchestra consisted of seventy-five professional players, and the programme included the 'Meistersinger' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures, and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony and 'Casse-noisette' suite, which were all admirably played under Mr. Beard's skilful direction.

Answers to Correspondents.

ORCHESTRA.—Mendelssohn composed his 'Festgesang' to celebrate the 400th anniversary of the invention of printing. The pieces—four in number—were performed at the unveiling of a statue to Gutenberg, erected in the Market Place, Leipzig, on June 24, 1840. The work is written for four-part male chorus with accompaniment of brass instruments, and was performed in the open air on the occasion above referred to. In Nos. 1 and 3 there is an echo orchestra (brass), which was conducted by Ferdinand David, while Mendelssohn led the main body of performers. In a letter written by the composer on June 22, 1840, after the first rehearsal in the Market Place, he says: 'I take my stand by the lamp-post, and David is 130 yards off with the second orchestra. It is an enormous business; over 200 men, 20 trombones, 16 trumpets, &c. Spontini himself would scarcely say Encore deux violons this time.' No. 2 of the set of pieces was adapted by Dr. W. H. Cummings to Charles Wesley's Christmas hymn 'Hark! the herald angels sing.' For a letter of Mendelssohn's (in English) on the subject, see THE MUSICAL TIMES of December, 1897, p. 810.

TROMBONE.—(1) With regard to one of the small slides of your valve trombone having become fixed, we have to say that all slides should be withdrawn at times, in order to prevent them from setting. Should, however, a slide become fixed, a little grease should be placed at and round the outer end and edge of the tube by the bow, so that on the metal being carefully heated, before a fire or flame, it (the grease) will find its way down between the two tubes forming the slide, which it will liberate. Force should not be used, as the valve connected with the slide might thereby be strained and rendered useless. (2) As the note (E) in the violin piece is printed with a stem up and down, it should be played both on the E string and the A string, the latter by the fourth finger.

SCOT.—(1) For sacred pieces suitable for a junior choir of girls and boys try 'The Lord is my Shepherd' and 'By Babylon's waters,' by Henry Smart; 'O how amiable,' by J. H. Maunders; 'The Lord Himself is thy Keeper,' by Hugh Blair (all these are in two parts); Twelve sacred songs, by Stainer (in unison). (2) A sacred cantata for mixed voices may be selected from 'The daughter of Jairus' (Stainer), 'Olivet to Calvary' (J. H. Maunders), 'The Holy Child' (Thomas Adams), and 'The story of Bethlehem' (John E. West).

W. W.—(1) Brahms played (on the pianoforte, and from memory) his own adaptation of Bach's Toccata in F for organ; it has not been published. (2) The late Sir Herbert Oakeley did possess the autograph of Bach's Organ prelude and fugue in B minor. It was sold by Messrs. Sotheby on March 4, 1905, and realised £66. The MS. is regarded as one of the finest known specimens of the composer's handwriting. A reduced facsimile of folio 1 of the Prelude is given in Mr. E. M. Oakeley's 'Life of Sir Herbert Oakeley.'

J. E. C.—(1) No one is allowed to affix the letters 'R.A.M.' to his name. The only diplomas granted by the Royal Academy of Music are: Fellow, Associate, and Licentiate, each of these being abbreviated by the letters F.R.A.M., A.R.A.M., and L.R.A.M. (2) The studies of Isidor Philips and the compositions of Brahms and Tchaikovsky can be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

A BEGINNER.—'A scale of charges' may or may not carry weight in sending out a professional prospectus; it is purely a matter of opinion, the balance of which may be against the practice. 'Teacher's discount on music' is of a very varying nature.

W. D. R.—Your village amateur orchestra (strings and pianoforte) will find fond delights in Handel's 'Water Music,' as arranged, to suit your players, in No. 5 of Novello's Albums for pianoforte and stringed instruments, which might be followed with other pieces from the same series.

ERIN.—See the article on Irish Music, and a comprehensive bibliography, in the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (ii. 507). It is obviously incongruous to put modern harmonies to an ancient air, Irish or otherwise.

GEO.—The value of a teaching connection is what it will fetch. An advertisement might result in a purchaser.

FRANCES.—Why not play your 'waltz, march, and two polkas' into the gramophone, and then get some competent musician to write down the strains as they come forth from the machine?

IGNORANT.—The hymn you seek is probably 'O for the peace which floweth as a river,' of which four of its six verses begin 'A little while.' It was written by Jane Fox Crowdedson (1809-1863), and may be found in various hymnals.

BETA.—It is never too old to learn, anymore than it is never too late to mend; but at your age you would probably derive more satisfaction from the cultivation of your voice than you would in trying to master the violin.

BLACK COUNTRY.—Do not be discouraged; work on with persevering energy, although you have only one small room; remember that the largest room in the world is the room for improvement.

E. R. M.—We regret not to be able to trace the anthem: it is probably unpublished. Why not inquire of the Commandant at Kneller Hall, where you heard the anthem sixteen years ago?

'MARITANA.'—There is a selection arranged for pianoforte and violin from the opera whose title you adopt as a pseudonym by E. W. Ritter, published by Messrs. Hawkes & Co.

F. H. and CONCORD.—We regret not to be able to trace the songs you mention. Cannot you supply the names of their respective composers?

C. B.—The English version of 'Salvator mundi,' &c., is 'O Saviour of the world,' a collect from the 'Office for the visitation of the sick.'

W. N. S.—Altos (nearest congregation), tenors, basses.

ANXIOUS.—See answer to 'Frances.'

INTRODUCTION

AND

ALLEGRO

FOR STRINGS

(QUARTET AND ORCHESTRA)

COMPOSED BY

EDWARD ELGAR.

(Op. 47.)

Full Score, 12s.; Quartet Parts, 4s.; Orchestral Parts, 7s.
Pianoforte Duet Arrangement, 4s.

THE TIMES.

The alternation of tone-colouring gives many charming effects, and the disposition of the instruments is of the happiest. . . . What is really a remarkably poor little Welsh tune is turned to noble purposes in the two movements, and never has the composer given us work of finer or more individual quality, in spite of the tenacity of his theme. Phrases of admirable breadth and beauty occur, and there is an amusing fugato of capital structure in the development section. When it is as familiar as the spirited "Cockaigne" and the beautiful "Variations," there is little doubt that it will rank as high as they.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Far more important than the March is the piece for strings. This showed that the composer can make his mark without the aid of a ponderous orchestra. It proved, indeed, that Sir Edward Elgar can produce from his strings surprisingly varied effects of colour, especially when, as yesterday, he has the advantage of a solo quartet. The work is made up of excellent material, and, simply as music, satisfies the connoisseur.

MORNING POST.

The second novelty, an Introduction and Allegro for strings, is an interesting and extremely ingenious work. A solo quartet is employed in the most effective manner, in addition to the strings of the orchestra, and the piece is elaborated in a masterly fashion.

DAILY NEWS.

It is an old idea made new, and the contrast of the quartet with the full orchestra of strings has the happiest effect. A theme in the Welsh idiom gives a special character to the work, and it is finely worked up in the Coda. The elaborate fugato section which takes the place of the ordinary development is full of energy and interest, and the whole work is one of the most powerful the composer has yet written for the orchestra.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

It was an Introduction and Allegro in G for orchestra and string quartet, and was received with hearty enthusiasm by the crowded audience. It is based on a melody written in the Welsh style, which Sir Edward, with his customary skill, twists and turns with remarkable facility, and a fugato is introduced with striking effect before the composition closes with the tune played forte by the whole orchestra. This, deservedly, will become popular, for the instrumentation shows Elgar at his best.

YORKSHIRE POST.

The resourcefulness of the composer is well shown by the series of contrasts he obtains, and a remarkable section is a fugato elaborately worked, and busily employing the entire strings. The work, indeed, is distinctly original in conception and treatment, and doubtless will become popular, for on a first hearing the naive little Welsh tune sticks in the memory, and the entire composition is of that kind which excites greater esteem with familiarity.

GLOBE.

The idea has been very happily carried out, and the music contains a great deal that is both charming and effective, while it is almost unnecessary to say that it is admirably written, for Sir Edward Elgar is a master of his art.

ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE.

Sir Edward has here adopted with excellent results an orchestral disposition of the kind that Handel approved. This, without being designed on the grand scale, is a very pleasant, grateful piece of music. . . . I will venture to say that while the Allegro (especially the animated fugato) is fully as clever as everything of Elgar's must be, it has considerable charm and is not superficial.

PAUL MALL GAZETTE.

Excited to the point of creativeness, as the great musician lets us know, by Welsh scenery and Welsh idiom, the thought of this composition gradually, even with great slowness, surged into his mind. It was in the valley of the Wye, that strange river of dreams, that he finally brought his work to practical issue; and singularly beautiful that work is. We have indicated that the composer regards the work practically as a quartet; but if the orchestra is to be regarded as an essential element in the matter, the term should be changed to something more nearly descriptive. This, however, is a matter of detail, and it only has to be recorded that Elgar's dramatic sense is here in its most highly developed stage, and that the influence of a particular mood is expressed by him with such absolute truth and beauty that one likes to think of him as the English musician of to-day, who never published a bar which is dictated by insincerity of thought.

A HANDBOOK

EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING

600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY

ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &amp;c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Dublin, Durham, and Edinburgh, and the Victoria University; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

ONE HUNDRED PSALMS

(BIBLE VERSION)

AND

THE CANTICLES

EXTRACTS FROM THE PREFACE.

The "One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version)" forming this Psalter have been selected and pointed for singing in churches where the Prayer Book version is not used.

It has been well said that "good chanting should just be good declamation joined to a musical intonation. Only on this principle can be obtained that elasticity which is essential to emotional expression." Therefore, all rhythmical subdivisions of bars can only be approximate, and mechanical rigidity must give place to a natural rendering of these incomparable poems of Holy Writ.

The typographical arrangements should tend to facilitate and promote intelligent chanting. Not only is the beauty of the Hebrew parallels brought out by the disposition of the words in poetic lines, but the singer is greatly assisted towards the attainment of what should be his earnest endeavour, a devotional rendering of the Psalms.

Special care has been taken in selecting only singable chants, those that possess melodic interest and are free from harmonic complications. With a few exceptions, the reciting notes are not above C (third space in treble clef), and some of the chants have been transposed down from their original keys. While the selection includes the best known and well-tested chants, new ones have been specially contributed to this Psalter by Messrs. Josiah Booth, Alfred Hollins, J. H. Maunder, and John E. West.

PRESS NOTICES.

THE DUNDEE ADVERTISER (August 6, 1906).

There is one branch of psalmody, however, which has been much neglected in all the Scottish Churches—that of chanting. Indeed, it seems that the art of chanting was lost by the Protestants at the Reformation, and is only now beginning to show signs of revival. This resuscitation would be accelerated if conductors of Scottish psalmody could be induced to use an excellent little book published by Messrs. Novello & Co., Ltd., London, entitled "One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version) and the Canticles, pointed for Chanting." The editor, Mr. F. G. Edwards, has had much practical experience, and gives some valuable hints as to the best methods to be adopted in chanting; and has made an excellent selection of ancient and modern chants.

THE ABERDEEN FREE PRESS (July 23, 1906).

The Psalms most generally in use have been selected, and following these are the Canticles—all pointed and assigned to appropriate chants. The editor, bearing in mind the maxim that "good chanting should be good declamation joined to musical intonation," has adopted a system of pointing that is at once simple and natural. . . . The chants are admirably selected for the purpose intended. They mostly all possess melodic interest, and are free from harmonic complications, while their compass, and in particular the reciting notes, has been arranged to suit medium voices. The book makes congregational singing not only possible but simple.

CHRISTIAN WORLD (September 13, 1906).

"One Hundred Psalms (Bible Version)" is the title of a work just issued by Messrs. Novello, which has been edited by Mr. F. G. Edwards. Evidently the publishers think that there is a future for chanting in the Free Churches. The editor's directions in the preface concerning the troublesome reciting tone are admirable. It is to be hoped that they will be heeded. The Anglican chant is a compromise between unmeasured music, and it is full of traps. Hurry, gabble, and false accents are common. Where is really perfect chanting to be heard? The chants are well chosen from sources old and new, and in deciding what psalms to include the editor has had the help of Dr. Monro Gibson. The type of the words is delightfully large and clear.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS (July 30, 1906).

The aim has been to select such chants as are singable, and with some old favourites are combined new ones by Messrs. Josiah Booth, Alfred Hollins, J. H. Maunder, and John E. West. The book is certain to be appreciated, and the carefulness manifested by Mr. Edwards in his other contributions is also shown in this effort.

MUSICAL JOURNAL (September, 1906).

The pointing has been carefully done; it is simple and helpful to congregational singing.

THE TIMES.

There was one novelty in the course of the evening—at any rate a novelty for Londoners—in the shape of Dr. Cowen's elegant and melodious second set of Old Dances, which were first performed at Glasgow in January of this year.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The third number—a "Lovers Minuet"—is especially delightful, and has its full share of the Old English spirit; while the set of variations which ends the group runs over with pretty turns and ingenious device. Hearty applause fell to the composer when the new pieces were done with.

MORNING POST.

The Suite of English Dances by Dr. Cowen met with great success. The first is a graceful "Maypole Dance," pleasing in character. More uncommon, however, is the second, which is intended to suggest a sort of uncouth dance of peasants. In contrast to this comes a tender and melodious "Lovers' Minuet," which has a peculiar archaic charm and brings to the mind the vision of some old picture. The last movement consists of an elaborate and ingenious set of variations on an old tune. The Suite is altogether very attractive, and will doubtless become popular.

EVENING STANDARD.

Melodically they are quite as good as his first set, a work of charm and originality which is fully established as one of the most popular orchestral suites of modern times. In the matter of orchestration, the new set are even better. . . . No doubt the very graceful "Lovers' Minuet"—poetical and not unduly sentimental—will be acclaimed as the gem of the set.

DAILY NEWS.

A second set of "Four Old English Dances" by the Society's conductor proved welcome enough music in its way. One variation—No. 4—in the fourth and final movement perhaps pleased me more than anything else in the score.

THE DAILY CHRONICLE.

These attractive pieces merit popularity.

SUNDAY TIMES.

All four are characteristically melodious and graceful in style, but the greater favour was rightly accorded to the "Lovers' Minuet" and the "Old Dance with Variations." The former is directed to be played somewhat slower than the ordinary minuet—probably the lovers were sitting it out in a quiet corner—and is informed with a very delicate romance, while the variations in the final number are extremely clever and interesting.

WESTERN DAILY PRESS.

The present suite is in his happiest manner, and he has admirably reflected some of those measures which delighted past generations of English people. The "Maypole Dance," blithe and fresh, the "Peasants' Dance," sturdy and solid, relieved by the elegant and refined "Minuet d'Amour," are all in their way attractive, and the "Old Dance with variations" brings the suite to a capital termination. In its present form the work will certainly meet with wide acceptance.

SCOTSMAN.

Four in number, the dances are characteristic examples of Dr. Cowen's fine craftsmanship, while the third number of the series in particular, the "Minuet d'Amour," is certain to be very popular.

GLASGOW HERALD.

They should please popular audiences all over the country.

GLASGOW NEWS.

The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. "The Lovers' Minuet" was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored.

GLASGOW EVENING TIMES.

First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, represented the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity.

COMPOSED BY

H. WALFORD DAVIES.

(Op. 20.)

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

THE TIMES.

It is very interesting, apart from its intrinsic beauty, which is great, to see how closely the classical form has been preserved. . . . The first movement, which is introduced by a bass soloist and choir, in the words, "The glorious majesty of the Lord shall endure for ever," is a very original and finely developed Allegro, which only departs from the usual structural pattern at the close, when a dialogue between a violin and violoncello solo leads into the most charming movement of the work, an Allegretto amabile standing in the place of symphonic Scherzo. Its main melody is exquisitely suave, and a certain sedate graciousness calls up the image of some beautiful character. . . . The three "sayings" of Jesus chosen are such as point most distinctly to the essential part of Christian doctrine, since it is only through acceptance of these that the soul can be placed in the right attitude for the great ascription of praise which concludes the work and gives it its title, "Lift up your hearts." Here all is of the finest quality, from the bass "intonation," as it might be called, set to a plain-song melody from Marbecke, and the splendid chorus "Holy, Holy, Holy," the theme of which is taken from the same source. Technically this number is a set of variations more or less in Chaconne form, but the analogy is not pressed too closely, and with all the resources of his great contrapuntal skill, his strongly individual kind of harmonization, and the beautiful reverence and spirituality which were manifested in "Everyman," the composer reaches something very like sublimity.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The novelty proved to be an attractive composition, with some fine opportunities for the chorus and many exceedingly charming orchestral passages. No applause, of course, was permitted, but the crowded audience listened with the deepest interest to Dr. Davies's beautiful numbers. It is not difficult to predict a great success for this clever work. It opens with the declaration for the bass soloist and chorus that "The glorious majesty of the Lord shall endure for ever." This is followed by a long movement for the orchestra. Next comes a sombre soliloquy for the soloist, the words of which are taken from Ecclesiastes, the singer being supposed to be contemplating rather than sharing the human lot. The Finale consists of a setting of the Sursum Corda and Sanctus, the chorus work being of a plain-song character.

THE TRIBUNE.

The work is earnest, and there is enough in the music to remind us that the composer is a church organist, also enough to show that he is well aware of the changes which have come over the art of music—a spirit of freedom in the matter of harmonic progressions, and especially of form. The first movement, an Allegro energico, in which various themes are exposed and to a certain extent discussed, follows to a large extent ordinary symphonic form. It leads without break to an Allegretto amabile, softness and sweetness being the prevailing features of the movement, which, as a contrast to the preceding one, is decidedly effective. The solo for the bass voice, entitled "Soliloquy," ends with a semi-chorus, while in the Largo espressivo are heard "Three Sayings of Jesus." The final chorus of praise is mostly concerned with the "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts," in which the old plain-song version of the Sanctus is used.

YORKSHIRE POST.

Though the structure of the work may in its broad lines be referred to precedent, there is still ample scope left for individual treatment, and the music abounds in interesting and individual touches, so numerous and often so subtle that a very close acquaintance will be necessary to enable one to discover them all. . . . The first Allegro is founded on themes of great nobility, and here the composer reminds one of Brahms, not only in the general character of his music, but also in his power of welding fine details into a big and harmoniously conceived whole. The Allegretto, again, is charming, thoroughly genial and simple, without a trace of triviality, and combining conflicting rhythms without any suspicion of artificiality. . . . The Sanctus is most happy in conception, and the series of variations to which it gives rise suggests an endless Alleluia, and fit in perfectly with the general design. Altogether the work is original in design and full of interest.

THREE ELIZABETHAN PASTORALS

1. AN IDYLL.
2. AMONGST THE WILLOWS.
3. THE MORRIS DANCE.

COMPOSED BY

A. HERBERT BREWER.

Price, each, Two Shillings.

Full Score and Orchestral parts, MS.

THE TIMES.

Dr. Brewer was represented by "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," sung by Mr. John Coates with such admirable effect that the last had to be repeated. This, a description of a Morris dance, is an enchanting picture of a country merry-making, set to some excellent anonymous words, which are probably old. "An Idyll" and "Amongst the Willows" are also beautiful in a more romantic vein, and the three songs are as good in their way as anything the composer has done. They are sure to become widely popular wherever bright songs with orchestral accompaniment are required.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In these little pieces, composed for tenor voice and orchestra, Dr. Brewer has opened up fresh ground, and shown a pretty talent for imitating the antique. The lyrics, by an old and anonymous author, are quaint and characteristic, while the music happily reflects their spirit and adapts itself to their form. All are charming, but the one most in favour this evening was "The Morris Dance," a very sprightly effusion which, encoored at rehearsal, had to be repeated this evening.

MORNING POST.

Delicate and pleasing vocal pieces, which imparted a welcome lightness to the programme. They were sung by Mr. John Coates. The first, "An Idyll," proved the best in design, though the last won so much approval as to necessitate its repetition.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

Mr. John Coates sang three Elizabethan Pastorals by Dr. Brewer, composed for this Festival and conducted by the composer. Dr. Brewer has exactly hit off the sense of sixteenth-century music, and the Idyll which begins the series is exceedingly pretty, and was sung beautifully. Perhaps the best of the three was the "Morris Dance."

THE ATHENÆUM.

The first two of "Three Elizabethan Pastorals" composed by Dr. Herbert Brewer, are dainty, but the third, "The Morris Dance," is specially characteristic, and the accompaniment has been cleverly scored.

THE YORKSHIRE POST.

Dr. Brewer contributed a set of "Three Elizabethan Pastorals," entitled respectively "An Idyll," "Amongst the Willows," and "The Morris Dance." The quaint words, culled from a collection of Elizabethan lyrics, have suggested music whose lightness and fancy happily reflect their character. All three have genuine charm, but the daintiness of the quaint "Morris Dance," if not matchless, could not easily be matched for its daintiness and quaint humour, which, admirably interpreted by Mr. John Coates, so exhilarated the audience that a repetition was inevitable.

THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"Three Elizabethan Pastorals," from the pen of Mr. A. Herbert Brewer, were sung by Mr. John Coates. They are also well-written pieces. The last of the three, a Morris Dance, is very effective. Mr. Brewer evidently knows how to write for the orchestra.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A trio of dainty Elizabethan Pastorals by Dr. Herbert Brewer is clever and charming. The first, entitled "An Idyll," has a quiet lyrical grace. The last, "The Morris Dance," is riotously spirited, and was encoored.

HEREFORD TIMES.

"Three Elizabethan Pastorals," written for the Festival by Dr. Herbert Brewer, proved very attractive, and were much appreciated. They are light in character, but quite charming in their picturesque and dainty treatment. "The Morris Dance" is the most striking of the three, as there is real fibre and character in it, the quaint dance being charmingly treated both vocally and instrumentally.

GLOUCESTER JOURNAL.

Mr. Brewer made a distinct hit with his three songs. They are bright, tuneful, and at the same time scholarly. . . . Of the three songs "The Morris Dance" aroused the greatest enthusiasm on the part of the audience, though that might well have been because admiration had been pent up till the trio was completed.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The dominant impression brought away from the town hall by me was that Sir Edward Elgar has given us nothing better adapted to gratify the average taste and judgment than his latest work. . . . Speaking generally and without reference to particular pages, "The Kingdom" is built upon broader lines than its predecessors. The choral sections are more developed, even in some cases as though to the end of musical effect, a point to which more attention should be directed in these days of exaggerated regard for the "word." . . . In the present work I find also enlarged development of the individual utterance. . . . We have more or less extended solos, the most important of which, given to the Mother, fills nine pages of the pianoforte score. Here is a distinct gain to musical interest, another being an appreciation of the value of beauty in music, beauty of melodic phrase, of harmony, and of all that makes for artistic euphony. . . . To sum up this record of first impressions, it is no more than that the new oratorio is in various commanding respects the most acceptable work which Sir Edward Elgar has yet given us.

The grave and glorious works that followed "The Kingdom" were in the picture the foreground of which the Elgar oratorio occupied. Lofty and noble it, lofty and noble they.

STANDARD.

Music of great strength and originality. . . . Sir Edward Elgar has with little short of a stroke of genius made a singable and an interesting libretto out of the Gospel story, and with perfect literary sense of the fitness of things he has only added as an extra number a beautiful translation of the prayer of consecration that is with reason regarded as the original used by the Primitive Church.

Nothing more distinctive as a whole has been done for English oratorio of its kind than both this new libretto and this intensely well-conceived new music of our chief composer. . . . The whole work fulfils briefly its promise, and is frankly more secular and more dramatic, while it is infinitely less contemplative than its predecessor, and is as much itself a section as Siegfried is different from the Valkyrie. . . . To sum up briefly, "The Kingdom" is a live work, a combination of skill and inspiration that marks it as an English oratorio, not only of a new kind, but one that will go abroad and prosper and command respect.

MORNING LEADER.

The Prelude with which "The Kingdom" opens is without doubt among Sir Edward Elgar's noblest inspirations. . . . The first scene opens in an atmosphere of peace and devotion, and an antiphon melody plays an important part. Soon there is a singularly beautiful impressive chord passage, when the assembled believers unite in praise. . . . The scene ends with a chorus, "Is it a small thing?" of great strength and elevation of thought, and beauty of melody and harmony. . . . The delicious charm of the semi-pastoral opening of the next scene is a delightful contrast from which in turn there is a complete transition in the third scene. Sir Edward Elgar rises to great spiritual and dramatic heights in the passages when the Holy Ghost descends, and in Peter's sermon; and the design of the whole is masterly. . . . The Virgin's Soliloquy is not only the most beautiful portion of the work, but certainly the most effective piece of vocal writing Elgar has given us so far.

THE TRIBUNE.

I think that in some important respects the music of "The Kingdom" shows an advance on that of "The Apostles." Effects as great are obtained by simpler means. There is more clearness both in the vocal and orchestral writing, so that in the very complex passages nothing is lost. The music of "The Kingdom" seems to deliver its message more concisely, and, therefore, more directly, while losing nothing of that pervading spirit of devotion which is characteristic of its author. . . . Its music contains greater elements of strength, and it must take a highly honourable place in the long roll of works consecrated to the service of religion. It has living breath and creative power, and thus its existence is justified.

PALL MALL GAZETTE.

I believe that in the history of art it will rank definitely with the "Matthew Passion" of Bach. . . . In the interweaving of part with part, in the noble choral writing, and in the "remote beauty" of phrase after phrase, one can at all events think of the two men as standing on supreme heights which, in their own particular altitude, have not been before attained by any musician. . . . The final chorus, which is mostly a setting of the Lord's Prayer, brings to a fitting and triumphant conclusion one of the noblest works of art that I know.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The vast gathering had the pleasure of listening to a work which is worthy to rank with the masterpieces of the greatest of English composers. In several respects it is a stupendous production, the beauties of which it is impossible to fully appreciate at a first hearing. . . . Throughout there is a display of religious sincerity combined with an artistic fervour, which qualities will contribute to the popularity that is in store for the work.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

The story is presented with a mixture of power and sympathy which few, if any, living composers could approach. The meaning of the text—complicated with great skill by the composer—is always borne in mind, and his power of getting at the heart of a situation is wonderful. . . . It is undoubtedly a great work.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

There are pages in "The Kingdom" which any composer, ancient or modern, might have been proud to sign. From the opening bars of the fine Prelude which introduces the work the hand of a master is apparent throughout. . . . Whether in writing for voice or instruments, alike in the most placid and the most strenuous pages, in the simplest as in the most elaborate, beautiful and striking passages abound. . . . The final scene, introducing the Eucharistic celebration, is treated with great skill and contains some of the most deeply felt and moving music in the whole work, while Sir Edward is to be particularly congratulated upon the restraint and skill with which he has accomplished the difficult task of finding an appropriate setting for the Lord's Prayer.

TRUTH.

"The Kingdom" contains some of the finest music which he has so far given to the world. Elgar shows himself once again in this work possessed of the rare faculty of writing music which, while entirely original and intensely expressive, yet makes an immediate and irresistible appeal. . . . There seems no limit to Elgar's resourcefulness in the production of fascinating figures and tender, poignant harmonies, which are at once beautiful and appealing, and at the same time most subtly and delicately expressive. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that since Wagner no one has shown like genius in this respect.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

In "The Kingdom" I discover an Elgar more serene; more rock-anchored; nearer the final goal of his desires; more rarefied, more ethereal and yet simpler and stronger. There are passages of calm beauty such as he never wrote before. There is a greater technique, with less display of technique; a still greater command of effect by simple means. "The Kingdom" will be the most popular of the three great sacred works bearing Elgar's name.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL.

It will be seen that Sir Edward Elgar's arrangement of the various scenes is full of dramatic interest, a moving panorama illustrated in sounds of music in a style the composer has made his own, Sir Edward betraying his marked individuality in the wonderful art of his part writing and the independent employment of his themes in orchestra and chorus. The atmosphere that surrounds "The Kingdom" will be found brighter, the score is not so complex, and the parts for the chorus altogether lighter and easier than is the case in "The Apostles."

HYMN FOR ST. GEORGE'S DAY.

Words by the Rt. Rev. C. H. BOUTFLOWER.
(By permission)

Music by
C. H. LLOYD.

UPROUSE YE, CHRISTIAN PEOPLE.

Copyright, 1906, by Novello and Company, Limited.

1.

UPROUSE ye, Christian people, who boast St. George to-day :
 Arise, gird on your harness : go forth, tread down and slay !
 Ye may not cease from battle, ye shall not sheathe the sword,
 But cry "St. George for England, and England for the Lord !"

CHORUS.—We will not cease from battle : we will not sheathe the sword :

"St. George, St. George for England, and England for the Lord !"

2.

Is this a day for dalliance, is this a time for sleep,
 When Lust and Sloth and Mammon their reign of terror keep ?
 Bring forth the sign of triumph that alway hath sufficed,
 On shield of purest whiteness the blood-red Cross of Christ.

CHORUS.—We will not cease, &c.

3.

O Thou Whose Name of splendour is writ upon Thy side,
 Who conquering and to conquer before Thy hosts dost ride,
 True Lord of Christian knighthood, true King of chivalry, Thou in Thy saints art glorious : in them we follow Thee.

CHORUS.—We will not cease, &c.

4.

We too with Heaven's armies, we with St. George this day,
 Would seek and smite the Dragon, nor falter in the fray
 Till heart and hearth and nation acclaim with one accord

PLEASANT ARE THY COURTS ABOVE.

- 1 mf PLEASANT are Thy courts above
In the land of light and love;
p Pleasant are Thy courts below
In this land of sin and woe:
cr. Oh, my spirit longs and faints
For the converse of Thy Saints,
For the brightness of Thy Face,
For Thy fulness, God of grace.
- 2 mf Happy birds that sing and fly
Round Thy Altars, O most High;
p Happier souls that find a rest
In a heavenly Father's breast;
Like the wandering dove that found
No repose on earth around,
cr. They can to their ark repair,
And enjoy it ever there.
- 3 mf Happy souls, their praises flow
p Even in this vale of woe;
cr. Waters in the desert rise,
Manna feeds them from the skies;
f On they go from strength to strength,
Till they reach Thy Throne at length,
p At Thy feet adoring fall,
mf Who hast led them safe through all.
- 4 p Lord, be mine this prize to win,
Guide me through a world of sin,
Keep me by Thy saving grace,
Give me at Thy side a place;
mf Sun and Shield alike Thou art,
Guide and guard my erring heart;
f Grace and glory flow from Thee;
dim. Shower, O shower them, Lord, on me.

Amen.

THE

INSTITUTED, 1822.

---

INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER, 1830.

---

Patron: HIS MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT AND STRATHEARN, K.G.

---

THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC offers to students of both sexes (whether amateur or professional) a thorough training in all branches of music under the most able and distinguished Professors. In addition to receiving individual lessons in the various branches of the Curriculum, students have the advantage of attending the Orchestral, Choral, and Chamber Music Classes, and the weekly Lectures on music and musicians. Evidence of their progress is given at the Fortnightly and Public Concerts and by periodical Operatic and Dramatic Performances.

There are three Terms in the Academic year—viz., the Michaelmas Term, from Michaelmas to Christmas; the Lent Term, from early in January to Easter; and the Midsummer Term, from early in May until the end of July.

The Fee for the ordinary curriculum is 11 Guineas per Term.

A large number of Scholarships and Prizes are founded and are competed for periodically.

Students who show special merit and ability receive the distinction of being elected by the Directors Associates of the Institution, and are thereby entitled to the use after their names of the initials A.R.A.M. Students who distinguish themselves in the musical profession after quitting the Institution may be elected by the Directors Fellows of the Royal Academy of Music, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials F.R.A.M.

Subscribers have the privilege of attending the Lectures and Public Concerts and of introducing friends in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions.

An examination of persons trained independently of the Academy is held twice a year—viz., during the Summer and Christmas vacations—successful candidates at which are elected Licentiates of the Academy, and are thereupon entitled to the use after their names of the initials L.R.A.M. The syllabus is issued annually at Easter. Last day for entry for the September Examination, June 30; for the Christmas Examination, October 31.

Prospectus, entry form, and all further information may be obtained on application.
